FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 30, 1880.

Democratic Unity.

The New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania Democracy spoke on Saturday evening at the ratification meeting in New York, through their eminent representatives whose speeches we print on our first page, and they spoke with no less of hopefulness for the issue than of serious concern in the cause for which they were spoken.

Up in Luzerne county, under the stimulus of an occasional local victory, the Republican politicians are rapidly learning to be as accomplished as the Examiner and New Era would have us believe their political friends here are in the purchase of nominations.
