THE SOLID SOUTH.

HON. J. RANDOLPH TUCKER TELLS WHY IT IS SOLID.

A Voice from the Old Dominion—The Democracy of To-day is the Democracy of Jefferson—Hancock, the Soldier Statesman, the Statesman of Civil Supremacy Over the Military—Issues that the War Settled.

EVANGELIST MOODY.

His Pleasant Home at Northfield, Mass.—Some of the Personal Characteristics of the Man and the School He is Building.

The Mother of Presidents Speaks Through a Favorite Son.

Tucker rose while the band played a lively Virginia reel. He said:

I come to you from the old commonwealth of Virginia, and I am glad to meet the old Democracy of New York. It is a gratifying memory to me that in 1800 the states of New York and Virginia were united in electing a Democrat of that day to the presidency, and I come to answer a question frequently put by the Republican press, why we have a solid South. The Republicans don't like it—and if they don't like it they may lump it. We were solid in 1800—solid for Thomas Jefferson. We have liked a Democrat ever since that day, and don't like to give it up. There were two parties there, once, but the Whigs went up, and the Know-Nothings were disposed of by Governor Wise in 1835. If the Republicans had one grain of wisdom, which they haven't, they could have divided the white people of the South or questions of administration. But they did not let us divide. They forced every man who had a drop of Anglo-Saxon blood in his veins to oppose that party with all its powers. Virginia's sons are taking part in adding to the glory of the Union which we are still a part, thank God. The Republicans stole our liberties in 1865. They brought a governor to Richmond and put him in power there as a Simon-pure governor of Virginia. We said, "Very well, we sit here you, governor?" [Laughter.] And they brought a Legislature in an omnibus and set them over us. This was the Rump Legislature of Virginia; and in 1867 they passed a law saying that we were not a legal government at all, and they seceded us out, and then made old Virginia District No. 1, and the rest of the South districts, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, and put military governors over us. Who voted for that bill? James A. Garfield. (Hissses.) The whole South was under a pall. I have seen a fellow with shoulder-straps come into a court of justice and order a judge to enter a judgment—and this in old Virginia. I have seen 25,000 white men excluded from the ballot-box, and 100,000 negroes allowed to vote, and this in old Virginia. Do you wonder we did not rush into their arms? But there was a gleam of hope. There was a man down there who knew the constitution, which he had sworn to uphold. (Garfield) put the sword in his hand and said, "General, now wield it," but he laid it down and said the civil rights of the people should be maintained. Thank God that He created that sober statesman. He was not like a militia general in Congress who is very civil in military matters and very military in civil matters, who is one of the men who never begin to fight till the enemy is down. General Hancock could fight a rebel till he fell, but he lifted that rebel up afterwards. The old Confederate soldiers, Hancock, without a pension, say "Hurrah" for Hancock because he was a cavalier general. He recalls the old colonel in the "Lady of Lyons" who said it was a pleasure to know a man who had been able to fight you and then crumple on you. Now, about the Southern claims, you know them? (Laughter.) Why, all those Republicans who stand at home down there while the men pushed on to Gettysburg and met Hancock. There is no more chance of a solid South. Our claims being paid when Hancock is president than there is of Garfield being elected. The "rebel brigadiers" are enthusiastic for Hancock because he can fight, and when he stops fighting can make friends in Congress who will vote for him in the Union. I would submit to that verdict, and now we are going to stay in the union to see the Republicans put out of their ill-bred power. The war has taught a great number of valuable lessons, and I would recount a few of them now as they strike us in the South. The first lesson is that whatever people may have thought prior to 1860 as to the right of a state to secede, I believe that question is settled by the fourteenth amendment and the results of the war. Don't let anybody scare you by saying that there will be any more rebellion from the South. The issues settled in the war can never come up as causes of war again. Never! Next, for my colored friends, whatever is thought of slavery, I am sure that there is a large reserve of ungranted power in the people and the states which must be secured from federal intervention. Lastly, it is true that all men are equal, not in their natural endowments. I am not equal to the president or the judge of the United States. (Applause.) I don't think Mr. Garfield is equal to Gen. Hancock, and I am sure Mr. Arthur isn't equal to our Mr. English, especially on civil service reform. I say this, that the right of the poor man to his home is as great as the right of the millionaire to his palace; that what I mean by equal rights, and this is one of the prime underlying principles of Democracy. In this new era I declare that the Democrats are the advocates of a free press, a free ballot and some little free trade, too. I don't see why a poor man's blanket should be taxed 100 per cent., while the rich man's covering is taxed only 50 per cent. For a man of such good feelings as General Garfield has helped to do more bad things than any other man in America (Laughter.) The Lord made him so, and he could not help it. Now one word to finish. If any man tells you we want to break out in another rebellion till he

(A voice, "Lies.") No, I don't like to use bad words before the president here, but tell him it isn't so, and a riot at his heart of hearts he knows it. Fraud has bewitched with slimy trail into the seat of George Washington. The Credit Mobilier and De Golyer frauds are venaal compared with the fraud of those eight men who refused to go behind those returns, and by screening a fraud perpetuated a greater fraud than ever.

Dwight L. Moody.

A Description of the Evangelist's Home at Northfield, Mass. Exchange.

No minister of the gospel has had such audiences from night to night as D. L. Moody has had. Many regard him as the foremost preacher of this century. All know with him immense energy and unceasing toil he labors in revival work daily for about eight months of each year; but of the time which he spends at his home many would like to know particularly. Mr. Moody lives at Northfield, Mass., near where Vermont and New Hampshire touch the state. Northfield is a place of about two thousand inhabitants, and sits directly on the beautiful Connecticut river. It is an old village with wide streets shaded by elms and chestnuts. As the great evangelist drove from the depot to his house, about one mile from town, he pointed out so many old places that I began to feel that I had found an old friend. Arrived at his house a magnificent view is before you. There, from between the mountains of the North, comes the picturesque Connecticut river like a silver thread. A cloud comes between you and the top of a mountain in Vermont, while it, and the mountains over New Hampshire. These two states are only a few miles from the plain, old-fashioned farm house, with a long porch in front, where the evangelist lives. Plenty of room to satisfy the versatile nature of the man. The dining room is so large that you wonder, till he explains that here he holds his Bible meetings for the neighborhood. Then in his enthusiastic "jerky" way, he exhibits his hens and chickens, bees and pigs, and ducks, with all of which he is quite familiar, with the exceptions of the bees. I had so many beautiful theories about bees, and had been drawn into telling him of their curious habits, that he led me to a certain hive and removed the top. I will never give the particulars for I turned my back, but he saw me, and glancing over my shoulder, saw some very unelated antics on his part. Bees are no respecters of persons.

His library in which he works is large and airy, and well stocked with an unusual collection of good solid books on practical subjects. His wife, three children and a niece, who is stopping with them, constitute the family. At night we all went to Evangelist Pentecost's, to a neighborhood Bible reading. Mr. Pentecost has purchased a house and grounds on a half-mile from Moody's, and the two evangelists whose souls are knit together see each other every day. They are light-hearted as boys and live as plainly as did Abraham, who dwelt in tents, and eat of his own produce. It is a treat not only to be at their Bible meeting and see on what meat these men do feed that they have grown so great in godliness, but also to witness their merry every day life. Both are quite heavy set, and dress about as for the fashion of the old farmer. Both are a little over forty years of age, and wear their beards full. They are of the same complexion, dark auburn hair and whiskers, with gray eyes, and both have that peculiar, vivacious, restless manner that exhibits the excess of vital force which demands an active life. Such men would be tired to death if they had to wait in idleness a week. They rest the better when holding daily meetings than at any other time. They have no time for dissipated or abstract thoughts. These two men plan for still greater usefulness. The young ladies' school, which Mr. Moody has inaugurated, will be open in September. If the girls who wish a Christian education are able to pay, then $100 a year will cover all expenses. If they are not able, then it will be free to all who are approved for whom there is room. The chapel opposite Moody's house is finished. The large, new school building standing on the height overlooking the valley is to cost about $100,000 and be finished in August. All the money is in hand and no debts are allowed. The building is thoroughly modern in all its appointments. It will accommodate about eighty, and the best teachers that money can command are to have charge of the Christian training of the students. Mr. Marshall, of Boston a well-to-do layman, who was converted in the gospel meetings held by Moody and Sankey in Boston, has, with others, given largely to this school. Mr. Marshall is also a lay evangelist and has been very successful in holding gospel meetings.

Representative men in Europe and in America are interested in this school, and the two evangelists have other plans for more extensive Christian education, of which it is not proper to speak at the present time.

Rev. Dr. Blake, of Edinburgh, Scotland, the renowned scholar and theologian, is soon to visit the United States and will be entertained for some weeks at Mr. Moody's home. Speeches were made and rich in blessing that I expect at this retreat. But in all I forgot the surroundings at night, as I looked toward the Green mountains before we retired.

Just beyond that range of hills, in a sequestered valley, sleeps the poor girl who wrote:

"Over the river they beckon to me,
Love's ones who've crossed to the other side,
The gleam of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are lost in the rushing tide."

She lived in obscurity and felt the pangs of want. No one honored her and no one sought her out. She sang alone the songs of mingled grief and hope, and died among the lowly. The poet and artist, who are in us all at times, voiced themselves once at least in this sad-faced girl.

Now the interest of ten years we trust, is hers, together with that greatest gift of God, her Redeemer in whom she trusted.

From over those green hills the whispering wind came as I began to sleep, and it required no great imagination to hear them repeating her song.

I sat and think when the sunset's gold
Is flushing river, hill and shore,
I shall one day stand by the waters cold,
And list for the sound of the boatman's oar."

MALT AND HOPS!

BLOOD POVERTY.—The cause of the inability to meet with in every work of life may be traced to Poverty of the Blood. Too close application of the mind, want of exercise or sleep, have enfeebled the digestive organs and rendered the blood thin, watery and powerless to fulfil the great purpose for which it was created. What shall be done? Live a regular and wholesome life and take MALT BITTERS. This matches the Renovator of feeble and exhausted constitutions in the elements that go to nourish and strengthen the blood. It perfects digestion, stimulates the liver, kidneys and bowels, and builds up the brain and nervous system, and restores the vitality of the system.

MALT BITTERS are prepared without fermentation from Canadian BARLEY MALT and HOPS, and warranted superior to all other forms of malt or medicinal wine free from the objections urged against malt liquors.
