A Texas' Discovery.

After a Nine-Year's Absence He Comes Home to Find His Wife Married and Re-Married.

Indianapolis Journal, August 10.

A singular case of personal recognition took place yesterday afternoon in the Elm Tree grocery store, corner of South street and Virginia avenue.

A man, who said he just returned from Texas and whose features bore traces of exposure to the severities of border life, had visited the store once or twice during the day, and had made inquiries in regard to the names of several parties occupying houses in the immediate vicinity.

It appeared to be hunting for some one whom he could not find. Between 4 and 5 o'clock he had returned to the store and was scanning the faces of the customers, when a woman who approached the counter made some unimportant purchase.

He looked at her with an earnest gaze, and then, approaching her, said: "Haven't I seen you somewhere before?"

The woman replied that he might have seen her for anything she knew, and then, after taking a good look at the stranger who had thus, without any apology, accosted her, said: "Why, are you my husband?"

It transpired that he was, and that the couple had not seen each other for more than eight years. It was, however, no case of falling into each other's arms and weeping glad tears of recognition. Nothing of that kind occurred, and no emotion was displayed on either side, but mutual explanation soon revealed the fact that the relations of man and woman long broken off—could not be very easily re-established. His story was, substantially, that he had left Indianapolis between eight and nine years ago for Texas, where he had since lived and prospered; that for the first few years he had kept up a correspondence with his wife and family at frequent intervals, sums of money amply sufficient for her support; that in every letter he had urged her to follow him to his far Western home, but she had always refused to comply with this request, and that at last, tired of writing and sending money, he had discontinued the correspondence, and given up all correspondence with his friends in Indiana and had given himself up to the reckless, roving life of a frontiersman, all the time, however, adding somewhat to his cash account, until at last finding himself in a comfortable and considerable wealth, he had determined to visit once more the home of his youth. Her story was that when the money and letters from her husband had ceased to arrive she concluded that something had happened to him, and that, later, he was lost to her forever. She thereupon obtained a divorce upon the ground of desertion and failure to provide, and has for the past four years been the wife of another. The Texas acted like a sensible man and took in the whole situation very coolly. In a conversation that followed he admitted that he had no one to blame but himself, and said he did not wonder that under the circumstances his wife should have got a divorce. Indeed, he did not find himself very sorry at all, but that she had taken a very good one, and that she had taken a very good one, and that she had taken a very good one.

Whether her present husband will take the matter as coolly and philosophically yet remains to be seen.

A Famous Brigand.

Captured After a Long Career of Crime by the Italian Police—Sympathy for Him from the Fair Sex.

Correspondence Philadelphia Bulletin.

The brigand of whom I wrote in a letter has been captured. Originally there were two brigands, and as they were well-mounted they were not a little terror in the neighborhood they visited, but one of them was taken about a fortnight ago, and lay in ambush near the spot where his food was concealed, and while the brigand was proceeding to take it, the nearest carabinieri fell upon him and held him firmly until the others came to the spot. They bound his arms to his sides. Before being taken, he had a man with him, and he was free himself, or to turn his gun on the carabinieri, who held him, but it was impossible. When he passed through Bracciano all the town turned out to look at him; for it was around Bracciano that he committed the worst ravages, because many rich Roman princes and others have villas and castles there, and he could get greater booty from them than from poorer people. There are also some very pretty bathing places around Bracciano, and many a man has been ruined by him, and which were all fountains of profit to the brigands, for as yet there is no railroad to any of these places. Bracciano, consequently, was more interested than any other part in the brigand's capture. Those who had seen him were strikingly handsome men, and that, bound as he was, he caused fear to those who looked at him on account of the wonderful fire of his eyes. He is not much over 40 years of age. He had been around Bracciano for the last seven years, and had committed more than one murder during those years. In any case, the Roman province is well rid of the fellow, however much he may still be admired by the ladies. I hear that more than one lady has written to him to express sympathy in his strange fate, but he equally replies that these brigands excite great sympathy in the female mind. When Leoni was taken some years ago, a vast correspondence of love letters was found upon him. Russian and English ladies especially were most generous in their condolences. Tibursi also may, perhaps, have his share of love epistles when his trial begins. As yet, however, the brigand is sulky and will not eat anything.

Recent Republican Discoveries.

An "Old Subscriber" asks: "What wing of the Union army did Gen. Hancock command at the battle of Gettysburg?" None. Gen. Hancock was not engaged in that battle—on the Union side. Early in the morning of the first day of that terrible struggle, the general, accompanied by all the Democrats in the Union ranks, deserted to the Confederate army, and fought under the stars and bars until victory perched upon the banners of the federalists. The battle of Gettysburg was won by Republican officers and privates alone. Gen. Hancock, after Lee's defeat of the Federal army, returned to his command. As he had not been missed, he secured a large portion of the honors belonging exclusively to the Republicans. Gen. Hancock was violently opposed to the rejection of the south. These facts have only recently been made public—as we learn from our Republican exchanges, which, during a political campaign, never swerve a hair's breadth from sweet, heaven-born truth.

Robbed of Costly Jewels.

A New York Jeweler's Agent Loses $15,000 Worth of Diamonds in a Trunk.

Fifteen thousand dollars' worth of diamonds were stolen from Henry Schuler, a German Hebrew commercial agent, at Bagby's hotel, in Ulica, on Sunday afternoon or early in the evening of that day. Mr. Schuler travels for Noah Mitchell, jeweler, of Nos. 494 and 496 Broadway, New York. He has had much experience in the business, having traveled extensively in Europe for his uncle, a London diamond dealer, before he came to this country a year ago. This was his first trip through Central New York.

He arrived from New York Friday night, with diamonds valued at $22,500 in his trunk, and registered at Bagby's hotel. He made a few sales, in value less than $800, on Saturday morning, and then went about town in company with some German friends. He returned late on Sunday afternoon. He was away again from the hotel from 4 o'clock until 11 at night. He left his room locked. His precious stones were in trays set in tiers in a satchel made for the purpose. This satchel was locked and placed within a trunk which was also locked. On his return to his room Schuler noticed nothing wrong. When he arose and went to the trunk for a change of linen he was unable to open the trunk. Procuring the services of a saddler in the basement of the building the trunk was forced, when the discovery was made that a robbery had been committed. The satchel's lock had been broken, and instead of its contents taken the trays had been removed and the thief who was evidently an expert in jewels, had selected the most valuable pieces. Then the trays had been replaced in the satchel, the trunk closed, and the outer lock bolt forced with some sharp steel instrument into place again.

Among the jewels which have been abstracted were two cluster crosses, worth $1,800 each, several choice sets of earrings, valued at $500 and $750 a pair, and a number of shirt studs, rings, brooches, both solitaires and clusters. The settings of these were of delicate workmanship and considerable value.

Schuler, on making this discovery, notified the jeweler who had bought of him on Saturday and the police clerk on Sunday in the day the police authorities were called, and a complete examination of the premises was made. The suit of rooms which Schuler had in on the third floor of the hotel, immediately opposite the stairway. There are probably not five consecutive minutes in the day or early evening in which the door of No. 57 is not passed, either by employees of the house or guests.

The detectives as yet have learned little regarding the robbery. Two Germans, father and son, are known to have visited Schuler's room on Saturday, when they were shown the diamonds. Sunday afternoon one of the bell boys saw the son descending from the upper floors of the hotel during Schuler's absence. These facts have not been connected. The diamonds were exhibited on Saturday to a number of people, and Schuler's story as regards time and circumstances is fully corroborated.

The Other Side.

One Amos Bissel, having written to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, an intensely Radical paper, of his bad treatment in Texas, by way of political persecution, a regular member of its editorial staff, sent down there to see the real condition of things, convicted Bissel of falsehood in this style:

I notice in the Inter-Ocean of the 24th inst. an affidavit made by Mr. Amos T. Bissel, in which he says he was assaulted for making a Republican speech at Brazoria, and claims that he was afterward threatened with personal violence and forced to leave the country. I must always think there is some explanation that can be made of the affair that will put a different light on the scene.

As soon as it was known in Columbia that I was connected with the Inter-Ocean every attention and courtesy was shown me that lay in reach of the people. Democrats and Republicans alike called upon me and were anxious I should see for myself the inside and outside workings of all their affairs. On Saturday morning a Democratic lawyer called, with an extra saddled horse, and when I went to Brazoria to attend a Republican convention and a white man making a speech, and a strong Republican one, too. In unmeasured terms he berated the Democrats for their political shortcomings, claiming at the same time, that personally they were all his friends, and as men and citizens he held them in great respect. In fact, never heard greater freedom of speech in a political meeting; and there were present a large number of Democrats, with whom I was sitting, and whose faces I closely watched in the vain endeavor to discover any lurking trace of hostility. I was invited to speak, and strongly urged to do so by the Democrats, and should have had no more fear in giving full and free expression of my opinions than I would have in the North.

None of the men carried arms, either black or white, and while in Texas I saw one man alone, and he the sheriff of Brazoria county, armed with a pistol.

Medical Uses of Eggs.

For burns or scalds, nothing is more soothing than the white of an egg, which may be poured over the wound. It is softer, as a varnish for a burn, than collodion, and being always at hand can be applied immediately. It is also more cooling than the "sweet oil and cotton," which was formerly supposed to be the surest application to allay the burning pain. It is the contact with the air which gives the extreme discomfort experienced from ordinary accidents of this kind; and anything which excludes the air and prevents inflammation is the thing to be at once applied.

The egg is also considered one of the best remedies for dysentery. Beaten up slightly with or without sugar and swallowed at a gulp, it tends by its emollient qualities to lessen the inflammation of the stomach and intestines, and by forming a transient coating on those organs to enable the nature to resume her healthful work over the diseased body. Two, or at most three, eggs per day would be all that is required in ordinary cases; and since the egg is not merely medicine but food as well, the lighter the diet otherwise, and the quieter the patient is kept, the more certain and rapid is the recovery.

Schurz at Gettysburg.

"D" in New York Sun.

The early entry of Mr. Schurz into the political campaign recalls an incident much laughed over by the veterans of General Hancock's staff who were eye-witnesses of the splendid leadership which brought order out of the apparent hopeless wreck and rout of the first day at Gettysburg.

Hurrying across the field amid the panic-stricken fugitives, there came face to face with Hancock an officer wearing the uniform of a division commander of the Eleventh corps, making his way, more or less demoralized, toward the rear.

"General," exclaimed Hancock sharply, as he barred the route of the retiring patriot, "place your men behind that stone wall, sir, and hold them there!"

"But, General," was the deprecating answer of Gen. Schurz, who might be pardoned for forgetting in the excitement the pure English he always uses upon the political platform, "I had no men."

"Then"—with an emphasis and with an expletive that fairly raised the future civil service reformer from his saddle, "get behind that stone wall yourself, stay there, and fight, sir."

The order was obeyed, but doubtless with a secret conviction, which has only grown stronger with the lapse of years, that Hancock, who saved the day, was after all, "a mere soldier."

THE TREACHEROUS WATER.

A Dangerous as Well as Useful Element

John C. Beck, a census enumerator at Mason, Miss., committed suicide by drowning.

The body of Julius Mier, drowned on Monday night, was found on a flat at the mouth of the Shesbury river, N. J.

The body of Daniel Bagley, one of those drowned near Bellevue, on Monday night, was found near the Highland Bridge, Newark, N. J.

The coroner of Long Branch has been directed to investigate the cause of the death of Mary Haggerty, whose body was found near some shipping at Sandy Hook.

The murdered body of John Hayes, of Ogdenburg, N. J., was found on the lake front, Chicago, Ill. Near by was a satchel filled with his contents.

The body of William M. Noyes' son, of East Forty-eighth street, New York, drowned in front of the steamer Oceanic on Tuesday, was found near Fairhaven, N. J., yesterday.

Purchase of a Railroad.

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad company, through Mr. Robert Garrett, third vice-president, has purchased what is known as the Buffalo branch, a small road running from Garrett station, on the Pittsburgh division, to the Cambria and Ohio to Berlin, a distance of nine miles. The road runs through a fertile part of Somerset county, Pa., which is noted principally, however, for its rich iron ore. The Buffalo branch will, it is thought, be extended and made to connect with the Cambria and Somerset railroad. The amount paid for the Buffalo branch was, it is said, $25,000 cash.

D. Sullivan, Malcom, Ontario, writes: "I have been selling Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for some years, and have no hesitation in saying that it is better than any other medicine I have ever sold. I consider it the only patent medicine that cures more than is recommended to cure." For sale by H. B. Cochran, druggist, 127 and 129 North Queen street, Lancaster, Pa.
