FRIDAY EVENING, SEPT. 17, 1880

Western Correspondence.

The City of Minneapolis—The Weather There—Old Lancaster Countians Heated Up.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 14, 1880.

The weather here is quite cool, fire is required and overcoats are comfortable. The supply of fuel here is obtained principally from the woods yards, (of which there are hundreds) into the woods yards, or distributed to purchasers over the city, who stack it up to dry before it is fit for use. Anthracite coal from Pennsylvania reaches here by way of Duluth and costs about $9 per ton.

The streets of the city are broad and lined on either side of the footways by rows of shade trees, mostly of maple, but many have planted the Lombard poplar. The yards of many of the principal dwellings are covered with a close clipped sward of green grass running down to the sidewalk, interspersed with shrubbery, tastefully arranged. Hennepin and Nicollet avenues, both running west from the Suspension bridge. These and Washington avenue are the principal business streets. There are several large wholesale grocery and dry goods stores here doing a business of over a million dollars each.

St. Paul has been for many years a kind of military headquarters for army officers of the Northwest. Most of the army officers in Montana, Dakota and the other territories reside here during a part of the year with their families.

Fort Snelling is an old fort established by the United States in 1819 at the confluence of the Minnesota river with the Mississippi. Previous to the war it was determined to abandon the post and it was sold to Franklin Steele, with all the land attached to it.

After the breaking out of the war it was found necessary to re-establish the post when it was re-sold to the government by Mr. Steele. Since then great improvements have been made. New barracks and officers quarters have been built, and it is to be permanently established as a base of supplies for the Northwest.

The government made an appropriation for a new bridge across the Mississippi at this point which has been built in the most substantial manner. A short distance above Fort Snelling is the celebrated Falls of Min-ne-ha-ha, when here in 1857 my friend Dr. Raub and myself walked from Minneapolis to St. Paul. On our way we stopped at the falls. The doctor had read Longfellow's "Hiawatha" and was enthusiastic over them. At that time there was nothing but the naked falls; no improvements of any kind. Now there is a railroad station, hotel and the grounds are nicely fixed up. The place is extensively visited by tourists. There is a broad avenue extending from the city to the falls, a distance of five miles, from the centre of the city.

On Saturday we took a carriage ride over the city and out as far as Lake Calhoun, from there to Min-ne-ha-ha, down to Fort Snelling, crossing the new bridge and drove home on the east bank of the river, passing the state university, a very imposing structure in what was formerly St. Anthony and now East Minneapolis. There is a splendid farming country east and west of this city. The land is very rich. Wheat is their great crop here, and I never saw so many wheat stacks at one time as I saw in that 25 mile ride. The season is too short for corn, the crop of which is not large. But they excel in raising potatoes, turnips, pumpkins, melons and cantaloupes.

The apple does not do well, except one or two varieties. Peaches are not raised, but there are plenty of them in market from Michigan. The principal fruit raised here are crab apples and a species of wild plum which are very abundant.

There are few natives here. There is a large sprinkling of Maine, Vermont and Massachusetts yankees, a few New Yorkers, and the balance is largely made up of Pennsylvanians. I found quite a number of the best citizens from our neighboring county of York. From Lancaster county I met Dr. John Steele, of St. Paul, who was here at his brother's funeral; Collin Hamer's family, of Bart township, and Washington Pierce, of Eden. Mr. Pierce is married to a daughter of the late Edward Paxson and came here in 1855. Mr. Hamer came in 1857.

I met in the Washburn mill a gentleman named Wormley from Mendota, Ill., who brought an excursion of 600 up to the fair. He was formerly from Cumberland county and is a nephew of George W. Wormley, of Elizabethtown. He appears to be a very enterprising man and I understand he has become quite wealthy. He has been over to Stillwater, and purchased a $11,000 hotel property.

I have met and made the acquaintance of a great many persons here. I like the people very much. They are generous and hospitable, and a stranger feels at once at home among them.

II.

A German View of the Situation.

Why Judge Stallo, of Cincinnati, Will Support General Hancock.

At a meeting of German-American voters, held on the night of September 10, in the large hall of the Cooper Union, a letter was read from Judge Stallo, of Cincinnati, who had been invited to address the meeting, but was unable to be present.

In the first part of this letter Judge Stallo shows at length that the Republican party has wholly survived its mission; that its true vitality is extinct; that its members are at cross purposes in respect to nearly all the political problems that now press for solution; that its present tendency is towards centralization, and the usurpation by the national government of powers wholly beyond its constitutional limits; that it is a dangerous instrumentality for promoting the schemes of monopolists and speculators; that its presidential nominee, as appears from his past political history, is ready to give its support to all measures by which the powers of the government are abused in furtherance of private interests, and that he is the representative of the very worst elements and tendencies of his party. He then proceeds as follows:

"You will not expect me, I trust, elaborately to discuss the topics about which the Republican orators and journalists are raising a clamor in order to stifle the discussion of the real questions of the hour—topics like the 'Solid South,' 'Negro outrages,' 'Confederate Brigades,' &c., &c.—the whole southern question, so-called, is, in my judgment, very simple. Notwithstanding the shameless distortion of the real state of facts by Northern manufacturers of Southern horrors, and the difficulty of reaching the truth through the mists of calumny and misrepresentation, there is no doubt that there are great political and social disorders in many parts of the South, and that the exercise of the right of suffrage by the negroes under the control of the indigenous whites is as illusory now as it was a few years ago under that of the carpet baggers. How are these disorders to be suppressed? By what means is it possible to secure to the negro vote that degree of political efficacy which legitimately belongs to it, in view of the fact that it represents neither physical nor moral and intellectual power? By a return to the system of military interference which has just been abandoned? That requires a standing army of several thousand men. By the incessant expenditure of expropriations of Blaine, Chandler, Logan, Cameron, Sherman, Garfield and the other embodiments of common and political morality, whose right to stand forth as exponents of the moral sense of the nation is evidenced by their direct or indirect participation in the processes of revising the electoral votes of Louisiana and Florida in 1876? There is but one possible solution of the southern problem, and that is founded upon a recognition of the fact that the disorders at the South are the natural and necessary consequences of the destruction by the war of their whole social and industrial system, whose reconstruction can be effected solely by the slow operation of social and political agencies now at work in the southern communities."

When we read these words, we are struck by the fact that the Northern Republicans desire that their policy or constant aggression upon the Southern people there will be an instant split of the Southern whites into parties which, in their struggles for supremacy, will compete for the electoral vote of the Southern States. Sooner or later put an end to all improper coercion of the negro vote and to the other outrages that now constitute almost the only capital of the Republican party. Of course, all this is the work of time. In history, we find that the Northern Republicans proceed far more slowly than disorganization and destruction.

"It is hardly necessary, I hope, to say that my resolution to cast my vote this fall for the nominees of the Democratic party is not indicative of a purpose to identify myself with any party for all time. The Democratic party, even during the last four years, has not lived up to the standard of its professed principles, and if in future it fails to practice what it professes—if, for instance, it does not place our negroes upon a national and equal basis—I shall certainly not be among its adherents. But I shall vote for Hancock because he is an upright, intelligent and patriotic man, who will naturally turn for counsel and support to the better elements of his party. And there are statesmen in the front ranks of the Democracy—men like Bayard, Morrison, Koerner, Thurman, Ranney, Payne, Groesbeck, Palmer, Trumbull, Davis, McDonald, Julian, Grant, Bigelow, &c., (not to speak of the Southern and Western Democrats)—who are conspicuous by their integrity, ability and patriotism, in whose hands the country is far safer, in my judgment, than in those of Sherman, Conkling, Blaine, Edmunds, Cameron, Logan and the other leaders of the Republican party. But there is another motive which induces me to assist in breaking the power of the Republican party and defeating the election of their candidate. I allude to the reprobation of the greatest electoral fraud perpetrated in the centennial year of the American Republic. I know very well what excuse the Republicans seek to offer for this infamous felony. They assert that the elections in the Southern States were so tainted with force and fraud that the true result could be ascertained only by a re-vote, a re-vote, that is, the substantial if not the exact form of the present. Now, apart from the refusal of the Republican attorneys before the electoral commission to put their assertions to the proof, and apart from the fact that the re-vote would be a mere defence, it is simply shocking to the sense and conscience of a civilized people to speak in the same breath of the common disorders incident to all elections and the deliberate attempt, carefully planned, premeditated and prepared by the head of the party and openly executed under the acclamations or silent acquiescence of nearly all its members, to set at naught the will of the people and thus to subvert the very foundations of popular government. And provisions among those who are guilty of this atrocious attempt on the life of the republic is James A. Garfield. It was Garfield who, with Sherman and others, manipulated the wires in New Orleans, at the ends of which danced the puppets, Wells, Anderson, Keenan and Cussey. It was Garfield who afterwards in Congress, in the course of the debate on the bill creating the electoral commission, gave the Democrats the most solemn assurance that this commission would have the unquestionable right to neglect the facts bearing upon the validity of the electoral returns. And it was the same Garfield who, after the passage of the bill and the organization of the commission, as one of its members, decided that it had no such right and could not go behind the returns. And this is the man whom his confederates now propose to put at the head of the nation! In all countries in which society is not in a state of utter moral decay there are certain things which every body hold sacred and inviolable, like the columns of the god Terminus in ancient Rome, or the trunks of the forest on the Alpine promontory, the 'Bannberg,' at the foot of which William Tell, in Schiller's drama, holds this dialogue with his son Walter.

WALTER (pointing to the Bannberg).
"Father, 's' time, that on the mountain there
The trees, if wounded with a hatchet, bleed?"
TELL.
"Who says so, boy?"
WALTER.
"The master herdsman, father! He tells us there's a charm upon the trees, and that a man shall injure them, the hatchet that struck the blow will grow from out the grave!"
TELL.
"There is a charm about them—that's the best those glaciars yonder—those white horns
That seem to melt away into the sky?"
WALTER.
"They are the peaks that thunder so at And send the avalanches down upon us."
TELL.
"They are; and Altdorf long ago had been submerged beneath these avalanches' weight, Did not the forest there about the town Stand like a butwart to arrest their fall?"
WALTER.
"James A. Garfield (who, it is to be hoped, is neither of Hessian nor of other German origin, as has been asserted) has laid his sacrilegious hand upon the trunks of the forest without whose protection we are sure to be overwhelmed by the avalanches of anarchy. If the old simple faith of the shepherd is founded in truth our children will behold the growth of that hand from out his grave, and with my consent, at least, it shall not be uplifted on the next 4th of March in front of the marble effigy of George Washington while Garfield swears an oath to support the constitution of a republic whose foundation he has deliberately sought to subvert.

Yours, &c.
J. B. STALLO."

THE AUTUMN SEASON OF 1880,

Strawbridge & Clothier

Have the pleasure of extending a general invitation to the public to visit the new and extensive addition to their Store, just completed, and now open for inspection.

The enlargement two years ago, although deemed sufficient for many years to come, proved inadequate to meet the demands of our wonderfully increased business.

We, therefore, during the past year purchased a block of eleven houses in the rear of our store, and during the spring and summer have erected on the site thereof an extensive addition to our former spacious buildings, giving us a depth of 305 feet, extending from Market street all the way through to Filbert.

Our arrangements for the season's business have as far exceeded those of former seasons as our future facilities for its transactions will exceed those of the past.

The great enlargement of the buildings has enabled us to entirely reorganize certain departments of the house, giving considerably more room to SILKS, DRESS GOODS and other popular branches of the business, which were formerly at times too much overcrowded. It also affords in other ways facilities for the service and convenience of our patrons not to be generally found.

Waiting and reading rooms for ladies and gentlemen have been added; retiring and toilet rooms for ladies, so arranged and systematized as must prove of great convenience to all our customers, both city and country.

Numerous improvements have been made, which space will not permit us to mention, but the entire building, which is believed to be unsurpassed in its appointments in this country, is open for examination and critical inspection of all who are interested in new methods of doing business, and in the growth and progress of our city and its institutions.

Later cards will give information as to the extent of our offerings in the various departments. The present is merely to extend a special invitation to everyone interested to call and inspect the buildings.
