

Lancaster Intelligencer.

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 4, 1880.

It is now the right and the duty of a lawyer to bring to the notice of the people, who elect the judges, every instance of what he believes to be corruption or partisanship.

The Disbarment Case.

The news of most interest to everyone to-day is that of the reversal of the order of the court of Lancaster county disbarring the editors of this journal.

We, as the particular editors concerning whom this test had been made and this law pronounced, would not have been more thoroughly deprived of our offices as lawyers than our fellow editors who are lawyers would have been, for they could not with self-respect have held two offices whose duties had been thus declared to be irreconcilable.

Nor would the people have fared better by the gag thus placed upon the class of the community to whom they especially look for political leadership and instruction.

For the understandings of judges are as many and various as that of men, and sometimes marvellously poor; and who can tell to what they would lead them, guided by malice or stupidity?

Of course this decision of the supreme court is what everyone expected. Common sense alone was needed to feel sure that it could not be otherwise.

For the judges of this court, in this hour of their humiliation, we have no word of further reproach. We feel as we have said, that their act was not against us so much as against all their fellow citizens.

It served a useful purpose, and it is well that it was done. It has secured an authoritative exposition of the relations of the bar, the bench and the press. It has served to erect a sign-board upon which those who hold judicial power may read its limits; and those who wield the editorial pen may find its restriction; and the lawyer may know his privileges and responsibilities; while the people are assured of the preservation of their liberty in a free press, in free speech, and in a respected judiciary.

Villainy Afoot.

Closely treading on the heels of the report that Garfield is to withdraw and Grant is to take his place comes a revival of the rumor that after the Indiana election has presaged Republican defeat the Republican governors of doubtful Northern states are to assemble their legislatures and choose Republican electors.

We have no doubt that the men who engineered and carried through the bold theft of the presidency in 1876-77 are quite capable of undertaking the scheme now proposed. But we very much doubt if they would run the tremendous risks involved for the slender chances of its success.

Almost a Disaster.

The Pan-Presbyterian alliance which had been getting along so amiably for ten days, in Philadelphia, came well-nigh splitting on a rock in the twilight of its sessions.

The Washington preachers, who have no votes at the presidential election, appeal to all Christians "to unite in prayer that God will forgive our great national sins; that the foundations laid by our fathers and cemented by the blood of our brothers may remain unshaken; that the people may withstand temptation to wrong-joining on the day of election, and that the candidate preferred by the majority of the actual citizens of the republic, the candidate who will be true to the genius of our institutions, to the best interests of the nation and our common humanity and helpful to the cause of temperance, purity and true religion, may be elected, and that political party may prevail whose success will most conduce to financial, civil and moral prosperity at home, to peace and respect abroad and to the favor of the God of our fathers."

THE CAMPAIGN.

Drift of the Political Current. Gen. Jack Casement, of Painesville, O., who has been classed as a supporter of Garfield, is for Hancock.

Adolphus Best, who was recently identified with the Republican party in New York, and who has voted the Republican ticket ever since, has withdrawn from the Republican executive committee and announced his intention to vote for Hancock.

A Republican politician met ex-Judge S. D. Morris in Brooklyn, and said that he had a friend who was willing to bet $1,000 that Garfield would be the next president.

A well-known and wealthy man announced at a club in Philadelphia that he had offered to bet $10,000 even that Hancock would be elected.

On the 14th inst. Mr. and Mrs. CHRISTIAN GAST, of this city, will celebrate their golden wedding.

Senator WILLIAM PINKNEY WHITE, of Maryland, had a splendid reception from the Philadelphia Democracy on Saturday and made an eloquent speech.

The statue of Robert Burns, in Central park, New York, was unveiled on Saturday. After music and the playing of bagpipes the statue was formally presented to the city and unveiled by Mr. John Paton, Mayor Cooper accepting it on the city's behalf.

The Philadelphia highway commission, out of tender regard for the six-cent fare passenger railway, has refused to license Herlihy's five-cent fare coaches.

The New York Sun calls on Gen. Garfield to print that letter from Judge Back reciting his statement to him—that is, that he had agreed to take ten shares of Credit Mobilier stock and had received the dividends upon it—and urging him to make no statement in conflict with that.

THE REPUBLICAN PARADE.

Disappointment, Dignity and Disorder. In accordance with arrangements made and duly announced, the general Republican clubs of this city assembled on East King street Saturday evening for the purpose of marching to the Republican meeting at Rohrerstown.

John Donohue, a miner at Leith station coal shaft, started to go to the five foot vein, a depth of 250 feet, by letting himself down the rope hand over hand, to see what was the matter with the bucket, the men at the top being unable to raise it. When but fifty feet from the top of the shaft he lost his hold and fell to the bottom. He was crushed into a shapeless mass. J. Morgan Messmore, watchman at the same shaft, volunteered to go down and make some repairs at a depth of a 100 feet. He had completed the work and was stepping from the platform to the bucket, when his heel caught a board. He stumbled and fell to the bottom of the shaft, 150 feet. He was taken out dead and terribly mangled.

THE LEAF.

The Local Tobacco Market. There has been very considerable activity in our local market during the past few days. Not less than 500 cases of 1879 leaf has been disposed of at good figures.

First-class goods are eagerly sought by manufacturers, many of whom buy directly from the packer instead of from the jobber. They do not go off so readily, and it is believed that holders of the leaf are a little too "steep" in their views, and that they will not dispose of their packings until they come down a peg or two.

Of the new crop little can be added to what was said last week: the crop is heavy; much of it badly damaged by the flea and other insects, and a little of it cut by hail. It is all on the poles and appears to be curing well, the weather being very favorable for that purpose.

Deed in Kansas. The Osage county, Kansas, Herald brings us news of the death in Osage, Kansas, Sept. 28, 1880, from typhoid pneumonia, of Mrs. Mary E. Horning, aged 28 years and 3 days.

She was born in Maytown, Lancaster county, where she lived until her parents moved to Dancausville, Blair county, Pa. She was one of a large family, consisting of six daughters and one son. This was the first link broken in the chain. She was married in 1877 and they then resided in Altoona until Mr. Horning went West. They first located in Osborne City, Osborne county, Kan., where Mrs. Horning made many true and sincere friends who will hear of her decease with sadness. Her disposition was naturally a very pleasant one, while her sympathy for others in trouble was easily awakened, and adding to this, her kindness of speech and gentle manners, it is not strange that she numbered so many friends and enemies. Her illness was very brief, extending over only thirteen days, her death occurring on the fourteenth day, at 3 o'clock p. m. Her husband, who was East on business, was telegraphed for and he had been but three days, he was reunited at once and remained at her bedside night and day. She had lately become a member of the Presbyterian church of Osage, having been a professor of religion for ten or twelve years.
