in close, dark places, with barely standing room, and are literally stuffed alive. Can such flesh be wholesome as food? Is the practice humane? I will own that the barnyard fowl is a filthy scavenger naturally. Still, in my opinion, there is no sweeter, tenderer fowl's flesh than that which is gained while running abroad. Nevertheless, the more healthy the animals are kept while fattening, the more wholesome flesh do they return, and this cannot be done in close confinement.

We Americans are imprudent in our habits, and in no one are we more so than in matters pertaining to our food. The fat of fowls is like oil and never digests, or is taken up with vegetable food, and the worst of this fat or grease is produced in the fowls confined and stuffed. Good solid meat can only be produced when the fowls are in a natural state of bealth and liberty. When fowls are prepared for market, the object appears to be to obtain the greatest weight at the least expenditure of food. Hence the practice of confinement. Fowls thus kept in confinement must be fattened quickly-in ten days, or fourteen, at least. They cannot survie the pressure longer. But the public appetite demands fat fowls, and this demand must be gratified. When the public learns to distinguish between the naturally and unnaturally fed poultry, this cruelty will cease. It takes longer to fat fowls for market in the natural way. First, the growth and feathering must be obtained, after which the body fills out plump. This cannot be obtained in perfection until the bird has got its natural growth, which period varies with the breed. The males are longer in arriving at maturity than the females. The frame is larger, the muscle greater, and greater vigor is required; consequently males never take on as much fat as flesh, neither is it of that sweet, juicy quality so manifest in the female, unless the cock be caponized, in which case the flesh is superior.

When the fowl has obtained its full growth, it is an easy matter to fatten it. Give plenty of good sweet grain, full liberty and access to water, and they will fatten hemselves. After the fowls are fattened, it is quite a nice point to dress the fowls and prepare them for market, when not sent in alive. If dry picked, there is little danger of marring the flesh in picking; but when scalded, much care has to be taken in handling that the outer skin is not broken, or ruffled, in the least. The legs, which are the most difficult to manage, should be picked dry, and not touched while warm or wet. The feathers from the under side of the wings may be rubbed off, not picked.

Arousing its Readers. An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of care. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them.—Memphis Appeal.

Not Exactly. Have you been much at sea? No, not exactly, but my brother married an admiral's daughter, Were you ever in France? No, not exactly but my mother's name was French.
Did you ever have the Rheumatism? No, not
