Gen. Garfield went before the real estate pool investigating committee February 1877, and swore that the $5,000 paid him by DeGolyer & McClelland was a commission for an argument made by him before the board of public works.

While under oath and protesting his innocence of corrupt action as chairman of the appropriations committee, Gen. Garfield said:

"I want to say this further, that if anybody in the world holds that my fee in connection with this pavement, even by suggestion or implication, had any relation whatever to any appropriation from Congress for anything connected with this district, or with anything else, it is due to me, it is due to this committee, and it is due to Congress that that person be summoned. If there be a man on this earth who makes such a charge, that man is the most infamous perjurer that lives, and I shall be glad to confront him anywhere in this world."

Gen. Garfield now has the opportunity he has so long desired. Albert B. Kirtland was the man who secured for DeGolyer & McClelland the influence of Gen. Garfield in favor of their swindly of the pavement.

"He [Chittenden] told me that if I could obtain the contract for DeGolyer & McClelland, he would give me fifty cents a square yard for all that might be awarded."

He further stated to me that if the influence of Gen. Garfield could be secured for the passage of the appropriation, which was then hanging fire, there would be no question about Gen. Shepherd awarding the contract to anybody that Gen. Garfield might request.

Gen. Garfield's support of the appropriation, and, having succeeded, saw my friend and told him that it would be all right. The influence of Gen. Garfield was secured through Richard C. Parsons, of Camden, N. J., who was to allow $15,000—$10,000 for Parsons and $5,000 for Garfield.

"After consulting with my friend, it was then determined, in order to speedily consummate the arrangement, that Gen. Garfield should be called upon to appear on the following Sabbath to Gov. Shepherds summer residence, and then and there make the request that DeGolyer & McClelland should be awarded the contract."

"I then informed my friend of this arrangement; and in order that Gov. Shepherd might not be absent, he went out to his summer residence and spent the same Sunday there that Parsons and Garfield called. After their return to the city he reported to me that the matter had all been satisfactorily arranged, and that as he stepped to his carriage, with Gen. Garfield and Mr. Parsons after leaving the house, about the last words uttered by Gov. Shepherd were: 'Gentlemen, pass that appropriation bill and your friend shall have the contract.'"

"By the agreement then entered into between Gen. Garfield and Gov. Shepherd, it was understood that Garfield was to be paid for the contract in the manner indicated; and that in order to obtain the contract he was to secure the appropriation for some three millions of dollars, which was accordingly done."

Here, then, is the man whom Gen. Garfield professes to be anxious to confront.

But it seems that Gen. Garfield was not really anxious to confront Mr. Kirtland. At the very time when Gen. Garfield was declaring from the witness stand that he would be glad to meet his accuser "anywhere in this world," he was privately urging Kirtland to "keep out of the way until the close of the investigation."
