JOHN WANAMAKER'S STORE

THE HOLIDAYS AT JOHN WANAMAKER'S,

CHESTNUT, THIRTEENTH AND MARKET STREETS, AND CITY HALL SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA.

THE HOLIDAYS.
There is nowhere in Philadelphia so varied a collection of rich goods as at father, mother, brothers, sisters, lovers, look for a gift.

There is an end even of gifts. Our collection is large enough and rich enough, one would suppose, even for a less frugal city than Philadelphia. These goods are now at the height of their glory. The choice of them are yours; others will come of course; but the choicest are going.

What is equal to the purpose, buyers are now about as many as can be comfortably served, and the throng will be denser every day till Christmas.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

TOLLET FURNISHING.
Sachets, ties, lamp-shades, pin-cushions, boxes, in satin and plush, embroidered and painted.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

ICE CREAMS.
Delicious rest with Point Melons, $50; the same may be seen elsewhere in $20.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

CLOCKS.
$1.25 to $150.00, all guaranteed.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

CITY HALL SQUARE ENTRANCE.
New room, new toys.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

TOYS.
Outer circle, west of the Chestnut street entrance.

BOOKS.
A catalogue of books may be had at the book counter. We want every reader to have a copy of the children's holiday books especially complete.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

LADIES' CLOTHING.
There are two general styles, one closed at the back, the other open; the latter is known as an "open" style. The former is the most popular, in great variety the high there is also marked simplicity. Great variety in cloths too, $2.50 to $10.00.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

MISSISSIPPI COATS.
Misses' coats in more than 70 cloths, shapes and decoration beyond counting. Sizes 2 to 16 years.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY.
We have the best goods the world affords, and the next best, and the next, and the next, and so on, in every variety. Where you can see so large a collection of the different grades of goods, all passing for what they are, and all of good quality, not cotton for cotton, wool for wool, silk for silk.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

EMBROIDERIES.
Our next spring's novelties in embroideries are just now received; they usually come at New Year's.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

LACES.
Laces change daily. Our sales are large, our variety always large, and but little of any one sort. Compare prices. A quarter below the market is not unusual.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

WRAPS, &c.
Such a stock of foreign cloaks as Philadelphia has not before seen, $10 to $250; silks and wools; dresses up stairs.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

FURS.
Furs of all sorts are going fast. They went last year and advanced in price as they advanced. They will have to buy. Expect to find here whatever you want, from a fox to a mink.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

COATS AND ULSTERS FOR CHILDREN.
Not so great variety as for ladies; but much larger than any other store. Coats, 2 to 16 years; in thirty different materials; collar and cuffs of plush; also in trimmings of hair cloth, trimmed with seal otter, chinchilla fur and velvet, $2 to $16.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

BOYS' CLOTHING.
Our stock is the largest what it ought to be for the facilities and advantages we enjoy.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

JAY GOULD'S GREAT LOSS.

HIS VAST CONSERVATORY ON THE HUDSON BURNED TO THE GROUND.

A fire that swept away one of the Principal Attractions of Lindenhurst and the Finest Botanical Collection in America.

On Friday night Lindenhurst, Mr. Jay Gould's summer residence at Irvington, on the Hudson, boasted of the largest and best appointed conservatory, containing the rarest and most expensive collection of flowers in the United States. When the sun rose Saturday morning little remained of the vast glass building beyond a mass of smoking ruins, sending out volumes of stifling smoke, and the $200,000 worth of property had been destroyed by fire in the night.

The green houses were situated about two hundred yards from the house, and being on very high ground, could be seen from the Hudson, not a mile distant. In the warm summer days passing on the Hudson river steamboats looked with astonishment at a mass of glittering matter, which, when the sun shone brightly threw out so dazzling a reflection that the eye could not long bear to look upon it, and it was called the "Lancaster Light."

The house on the west side was devoted chiefly to tropical plants, and was furnished with a class of fruit not to be found in the market. Among the grapes were the rarest varieties of the Black Hamburg, Royal Ascut, Champion of England, Blackland, Sweetwater, Barbarossa, Black Damascus, Syrian, Emperor, St. Peter, and West St.

In the east side house were more tropical plants, palms and tree ferns, together with two large and valuable collections of plants sent to Mr. Gould by the emperor of Brazil last October. Among these were the "Brazilian" tree fern, which is very high, almost challenging the house, which has an altitude of twenty-five feet, to contain them. Mr. Gould is a great lover of palms and tree ferns; of the former he has several varieties in his conservatory, and of the latter 45.

Among the tropical plants destroyed were crotons, coleuses, and anthuriums in great variety. The rose house was one of the chief objects of attraction to a visitor. It was forty feet long, twenty feet wide, and twenty feet high, and was filled with the finest winter-blooming roses in the United States, and nearly all the plants were opening their leaves when they were destroyed. In another house were pink and white roses, and in a third house were Indian azalias, azalias from Japan, and other winter-blooming plants.

The building destroyed is said to have been worth $150,000, and in the cellar beneath were goods worth about $10,000, consisting of cider, apples, coal, a small quantity of native wine, and other things. On all this there was no Mr. Gould's conservatory could be insured, and Mr. Mangold advised him not to insure it, saying the measures he had taken to provide against fire were a sufficient guarantee for his safety. Mr. Mangold is not a young man, and he has been a heart-broken man since he has prevented the fire. He said: "That nobody in my position could have done but I ought not to have advised Mr. Gould against insuring his property. It was foolish and careless of me, but I never thought of the possibility of such a thing as a fire. Mr. Gould will be more disturbed about this than most people might think; the money loss, of course, will not affect him much, but he is so fond of flowers, and, indeed, of everything beautiful in nature. He has a very fine conservatory, and justly so, for there was nothing like it in all this country. He has not been down here to see the ruins to-day, but he knows there is little or nothing saved. As for myself, I can only be satisfied to have my property saved, and I suppose I should not complain, but I shall miss them very dear to me, and I shall miss them as though they had been my own children.

The cause of the fire was apparent. The heat was supplied to the conservatory by the Weatherhead apparatus, which sends boiling water through tubes to all parts of the building. There were three boilers in the central house, two in the conservatory, and one in the east wing, and in the east wing, from the central house arose a tall chimney, running close to the lower, and touching this chimney, was a large beam or rafter. The wall of the chimney was thin, and the furnace beneath it was very hot, and the heat was very great. It passed through the rafter and ignited it, and the flame that was first seen by Anshelien and Hains was undoubtedly coming from the beam.

Lindenhurst is one of the most beautiful of the many charming country homes on the Hudson. It contains 190 acres, and was purchased by Mr. Gould last spring. The house commands a noble view of the river, and is itself in the structure of the conservatory, and is a fine specimen of the conservatory, and is a fine specimen of the conservatory, and is a fine specimen of the conservatory.

From a distance it bears the appearance of a castle without anything of the gloomy aspect of the latter.

MARRIAGE OF THE GIRL HE ROBBED.

Judge and Minister in their Robes Heading the Wedding Procession.

In Montreal the court of general sessions just concluded began with the trial of Richard Liston, a young man of 24, for the larceny of $2,750 from Stella Hart, a pretty Jewess of 17, and ended their marriage yesterday in the court room where he was tried and convicted, and where he will be sentenced. Liston has led a roving life, and several times got into scrapes with the law. Eight months ago he made the acquaintance of Stella and eloped with her to New York, where they remained home, stole $2,750 from her father, a well-to-do optician here. On their return from New York Stella refused to marry her, and she had him arrested on the charge of stealing the money from her. He was found guilty, and sentence was suspended to allow for the marriage taking place in the interim. Although an attempt had been made to keep the matter private, the court room was crammed, lawyers, merchants and members of Parliament being not the least interested and desirous of seeing the marriage. The parties met in the office of the clerk of the court, and then proceeded in procession, and on to the court of queen's bench chamber, a guard of police bringing up the front and rear, Judge Dugas and the Rev. Gavin Long, of the St. Andrew's church of Scotland, in their robes, preceding the couple. The bride looked happy, and was attired in a walking habit. The bridegroom was solemn. He stalked along, his expectant wife one side and a jailer on the other. The ceremony took place in front of the judges' bench under the huge emblazoned arm of Great Britain, bearing the inscription: Honi soit qui mal y pense. The service was conducted with all due solemnity. The girl returned to her friends and the prisoner was driven back to jail. His sentence, it is said, will be light.

JEFFERSONIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Fresh Inspiration for the Democracy.

A Washington correspondent of the New York Sun says: "How does it happen that when a Democratic reformer is actually elected president he cannot be inaugurated, and that when we nominate a Democratic soldier, who is undoubtedly the choice of a majority of the people, we cannot get the votes polled? The cause lies in the superincumbent body of death known as the wormy, spiritless Democratic organization. It needs reinvigoration by a movement from below to be blown upon by the hot, kindling breath of the people themselves. And here I wish to call the attention of your readers to a spontaneous popular movement which is taking shape in many parts of the country, and is, in my judgment, the most hopeful sign anywhere visible.

"When the vote had been taken on the 23d of November, the members of the national and state committees, who had some months been consuming the contributions of their fellow citizens, under the pretence that they are doing something toward the election of Hancock, took their hats and went home, regretting the loss of the offices and jobs which seemed so near. But when they saw that they were not elected, they went home with a moan, and a majority of the people, who had not attended to the matter themselves, had now wherever you look the Hancock and English clubs, without the least promptness or management from above, are made permanent. In some places they resolve themselves into Jeffersonian Democratic Associations, a name which has a meaning and is in itself a platform of principles and a catch cry. These Jeffersonian associations will, in all probability, absorb all the other Democratic societies. The creed of Jefferson will endure as long as the free institutions which rest upon its principles; and the party which he founded can live only by living up to it. Here, then, is life and inspiration. The old party will renew its strength by having its limbs covered with the sores and emaciated with filth of foolish wanderings in the wilderness of modern errors, in this health-giving fountain of pure Democracy, and rise more than equal to the task.

There never was a time in the history of the American republic when the Jeffersonian and the Hamiltonian ideas of government were brought into such sharp collision as they are now. In John Adams's time the danger was slight, but now there was then no grand alliance of so-called "business"—of capital, corporations and monopoly—with the party in power. The Federalists could procure an occasional conviction under the sedition laws, could have an editor publicly whipped, or a citizen who spoke disrespectfully of the president imprisoned. But the alien and sedition laws were trifles besides the Republican election laws, which authorize an army of civil and military agents of a "strong government." The patronage of the federal government was then about as great as that of a respectable railway company is now; no hundreds of thousands of millions of annual appropriations, no mighty chain of banks, of monopolies protected by law, and corporations subsidized. We are face to face, or at least in the opinion of most men we shortly will be face to face, with the final effort to establish not merely Hamiltonian "strong government," but a public power in this country; and if ever there was a time when men minded to preserve the Jeffersonian principles of government should associate themselves together in Jeffersonian clubs, literary clubs, popular committees, or societies, that time is now. These clubs in permanent correspondence with each other, transmitting the results of their deliberations from one to another, moved by the popular impulse and more democratic than the Democrats, might, perhaps, have some effect, and a conspiracy could undermine, and no open force could ever surmount."

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Presbyterian theological seminary of the Northwest, at Chicago, Ill., the Hon. Cyrus H. McCormick paid over as a new and unconditional gift the sum of $75,000, making, with previous gifts, a total of more than $200,000, presented by him to that institution. Mr. McCormick also pledges himself to give $5,000 for every like sum presented by any person after a fund of $50,000 has been raised from other sources.

Prof. James C. Watson, of Wisconsin, bequeathed his property, valued at $60,000 to the National Academy of Sciences of the United States, excepting the sum of $3,000 and $200 annuity set apart for the support of his wife, and $150 annuity to his mother. Mrs. Watson is possessor of considerable property in her own name and is wholly independent of her husband's estate. Having no children, it has long been the expressed purpose of the professor and his wife to give their property, after death, to aid the cause of science.
