Germantown Telegraph. Wells in these parts have often been low, but never perhaps lower than they have been most of the past summer and autumn. Many were looking anxiously for rain, so that the springs might rise again. But local rains have nothing to do with our wells, and this can be seen by any one who has anything to do with digging of the ground. It makes no difference how dry or how wet may be the summer season: if in the fall we dig a few feet we find the ground dry. No rain penetrates to any great depth after the spring rains are over and before the regular autumn-soakers commence. Sometimes we have rain several days in a week, and considerable of it at a time, yet, after all this, people on digging down find the earth dry six inches from the surface. In fact, the earth has as much as it can do in any season to meet the demands on it from the vegetation growing on its surface As fast as the surface dries from the heat there is a continual flow from the lower portions to suply the waste, just as water in a saucer will flow to the top of a sponge so that in the end the saucer is dryer than the sponge in it. Thus the substratum in a dry season is often dryer than the earth loosened by cultivation on the surface.

The water which feeds springs and wells does not come from local rains, except they are very shallow, but often hundreds of miles away. The freet cracks and breaks up the rocky faces of mountains, and the rains and melting snowssometimes many feet in depth-descend through the clefts. Rocks do not absorb water as earth does. Collected in this way, the water sinks deep into the earth in the fissures, following the strata to long distances and appearing again only when the rocky veins crop up near the surface Those, therefore, who are looking for deep water in their wells and high water in their springs, have rather to pray for mountain rains than local showers—which serve our crops, nothing 'more-after summer weather once sets in.

Black Ants and Insect Destroyers. The Geneva Continent says: "Many of the leading orchard proprietors in Northern Italy and Southern Germany are enthusiastic cultivators of the black ant, which industrious insect they hold in high esteem as the fruit grower's best friend. They establish ant-hills in their orchards, and leave the police service of their fruit trees entirely to the tiny sable colonists, which pass all their time in climbing up the stems of the fruit trees, cleansing their boughs and leaves of malefactors, mature as well as embryotic, and descending, laden with spoils, to mother earth, where they comfortably consume or prudently store away their booty. They cap- pared only and sold by ture the eggs of caterpillars, grubs and canker-worms; they "requisition" all the countless varieties of leaf-lice that strip trees of their young foliage; they break up the chrysalides awaiting transformation, and carry them off in minute morsels; they never meddle with sound fruit, but only invade such apples, pears and plums as have already been penetrated by the canker, which they remorselessly its fastnesses within the very heart of the fruit. Nowhere are apple and pear trees so free from blight and destructive insects as in the immediate neighborhood of an ant-hill five or six years old The favorite food of ants would appear to be the larvæ and pupæ of those creatures which spend the whole of their brief existences in devouring the tender shoots and juvenile leaves of fruit trees. But nothing in the way of creeping or stationary preyers upon vegetation comes amiss to the indefatigable and insatiable ant whose animosity against the minuter insect tribes is so inveterate that "his great revenge hath stomach for them all"

Mashing Grain.

A new machine has been put in operain Rochester, N. Y., for grinding grain, which it is said will revolutionize the milling trade, especially in the grinding of wheat. The change consists in crushing the grain between rollers instead of grind ing it by stones. The invention is called the Hungarian system, and this is its first introduction into New York state, out of which it probably will not extend.

Removing Candle Grease.

The French, who use candles to a great er extent than any other nation, have a way of effacing candle grease which i worth knowing. Instead of applying a hot iron, they use a few drops of spirits of wine, rubbing the spot with the hand.

The grease becomes powder and leaves no

Its Action is Sure and Safe. The celebrated remedy Kidney-Wort can now be obtained in the usual dry vegetable form, or in liquid form. It is put in the latter way for the especial convenience of those who cannot readily prepare it. It will be found very concentrated and will act with equal efficiency in either case. Be sure and read the new advertisement for particulars.—South and West.
