PHILADELPHIA.

The general improvement in business the past year, with the prospect of a very large increased demand for all kinds of Dress Goods, induced all American buyers of Foreign Goods to place immense orders. This was universally the case, so much so that, perhaps without exaggeration, 50 per cent. more goods were imported than the country could possibly consume. As a consequence, there has been a great break in prices in all of the great many fabrics, which we shall fully meet.

FRIDAY EVENING, DEC. 17, 1880.
Jensen on "Resurrection."
An Overt True Tale.

Baltimore Sun.
As so many false reports have appeared in the papers purporting to have emanated from me relative to the modus operandi of "resurrecting," I will for the first time give to the public, for the edification of its morbid curiosity, a synopsis of my experience in the only instance where I figured as an actual participant. One dizzy moonlight evening, about 9 o'clock, I was sauntering up one of the principal thoroughfares of a city not a thousand miles from Baltimore. It was the 2d of December, 187-, and I won't easily forget it. As I was somewhat chilled, it occurred to me that a warm drink of some kind would be beneficial, so I accordingly entered the bar-room of one of the hotels, where I beheld several familiar faces. After a cordial greeting, and an introduction to those of the party unknown to me, I was invited to join them in a libation, which I accordingly did.

The party consisted of an ex-governor, then United States senator, and his son, a secretary of state from a Western state, several government officials from the different departments in Washington, two gentlemen from the West who had large claims against the government, and my humble self. While talking to the strange gentlemen, I was surprised to notice mysterious nods, winks and whispers, when I was suddenly accosted by one of my acquaintances with the query, "Well, Jensen, you have been out in the wilderness a good many years and fighting Indians and other varmints, and I suppose you think you possess a h-l of a lot of nerve, but you are in front of an audience that will beat your Indians all to pieces, are you going on a terrible expedition to-night, and you come along if you want to; will you go?" I naturally inquired where this expedition was bound to, but was told that I would find out before I got home again. Being fond of an adventure at any time, and concluding from the above remark that I certainly would get home again, I concluded to go, so we took another drink and entered two carriages in waiting and drove off. In about half an hour we halted on our first "cove" and the honor dealer, where one of the party ordered twelve pint bottles of the best whisky. (We were but three besides the drivers.) And here I must digress a moment to relate a conversation that struck me forcibly at the time, and which had occasion to this over a long time since. It will be remembered that the gentleman ordered twelve bottles of whisky and we were only ten. When the order was given another gentleman spoke up and said: "No, only eleven; the doctor has the last bottle for the Government association and is a strict temperance man." The first-named turned, and looking at the speaker in astonishment said: "You are mistaken; he is no fanatic; he is a practical man. There is not a hypocrite here in the house. A more square, honest man never lived."

Well, each one was handed a bottle, and after getting some cigars we continued our journey, and in about three-quarters of an hour we halted before a large, gloomy building, which I at that time did not know at all. All things have an end, and our journey elicited nothing but mysterious nods and winks. We rang the bell, and when the door was opened, on inquiry if the doctor was in, the answer was in the affirmative, so we entered. In a few moments a gentleman entered, and inquired what we had come for; so we commenced to ascend the stairway one after another until I asked the gentleman next me if he thought the doctor was carrying us to heaven. All things have an end, and so had the staircase, which landed us by a door which we entered in single file, with the warning words shouted back from the doctor, "Look out, gentlemen, and follow me."

The door was shut, the gas lit, and I found myself in the dissecting room of a college, where lay seven bodies, some partly and others ready for dissection. Although not prepared for it, I felt but little or no surprise, as I had been in dissecting rooms of the university for some many times. We had an addition to our party coming up stairs, and was informed that he was the doctor's private student, and that he would graduate the following spring. The first thing we did was to pull out the doctor's cigar, and light it, and light a fresh cigar. Then we took a look at the different subjects until the doctor called us together for consultation. Then, and not till then, did I learn what the expedition was. The doctor was and was in the habit of writing a work on "resurrection," and he had the student brought out from a closet two large bags, two shovels and a hatchet. A shovel and the hatchet were put in one bag and the other shovel in the other, the doctor taking one bag, the student the other. The doctor, upon the student's saying that he had better go and hunt the others up and bring them back. It appeared afterward that the doctor and student had agreed to give us all a "living burial," and while I was relieving that frightful and the student's wailing whistle, which, in my position, I was unable to hear. The doctor, understanding the signal, exclaimed, "Run for your lives!" and a general stampede followed. In a few minutes the student brought them back—all except our secretary, who could not be found. It appeared that they had been unable to find the exit hole, and had stowed themselves away in every conceivable hiding place. There was a general laugh and some cheering, and the secretary, who was wonderfully nervous, congratulated on my wonderful nerve, and I kept my own counsel. The doctor, saying that we had no more time for fooling, told one of the gentlemen from the West to jump down and hand him up to me, the student saying that he had better go and hunt the others up and bring them back. The doctor, upon the student's saying that he had better go and hunt the others up and bring them back. The doctor, upon the student's saying that he had better go and hunt the others up and bring them back.

with the student. The graves were reached in about one hundred yards, and were some fifty feet apart. The doctor laid down his sack, took out the spade and hatchet, and said, "Now to biz, governor, it is your first turn. With these words he struck the spade in about three-fourths back from the head of the grave. Then he turned to the student, pointed down hill, and said, "Down there is your work, follow me and I will show you. We will see who gets out first."
Meaning that the governor had taken a couple of spadefuls of dirt off the top of the grave, and he turned to his son and me, who stood near, saying, "I will be hanged if I see any fun in this thing. What do you two fellows think?" Hadn't he better get out of here? wonder what keeps that old scamp of a doctor; won't he be back pretty soon?" At that moment the doctor did appear, asking the governor why he didn't dig. After a few more spasmodic efforts he handed the shovel to his son saying, "Now it is your turn; see what you can do about it." His son took hold of the shovel and made the dirt fly promiscuously at a tremendous rate, until the doctor told him to take it coolly and throw the dirt in one place. In a few minutes he was tired. Then my turn came. In the meantime I had used a shovel many times, and knew how to handle one. So I did very well for about fifteen minutes. The gentlemen next to me, who were from the West, also worked well, so we made pretty good headway.

When the Governor's turn came he refused to go down, thus forfeiting the first bottle of wine. The balance of us kept on, I think three rounds, when it commenced sounding uncomfortably hollow, and we all in turn dipped very lightly in the earth and got tired remarkably quick. The gentleman behind me was the first to make a desperate dive for the coffin, and then the suspense was over. He went another round, clearing the dirt off the coffin for about three feet. Then the doctor went down to inspect. After a few moments he declared that he was "nice." It was a coffin with hinges in the lid, that easily could be laid back. He unscrewed the top screws and raised the top, so it rested against the dirt at an angle of about forty degrees. I could discern something white and saw him feel it. He had spoken to me at that time I could not have answered him. Finally he jumped up, saying, "He is all right, and we will have him up in a minute. Governor, jump down and hand me one of your arms." I will see you in Halifax first, "I ordered me at an uneasy tone. His son had edged away, not caring to undertake the task. I saw him take a nip from his bottle to strengthen him for the ordeal, and he came up very slowly.

down we found our secretary, who had happened to find his way out in the early night, but did not feel like going back, not knowing what had occurred. We found the carriages in waiting, deposited a body in each, and drove to the college, glad that it was all over, each one relating his feelings, &c., except myself, who had but little to say, and I was apologized for my modesty. Arrived at the college the bodies were lifted out and we were driven to our respective homes. I to dream of goblins and ghosts, am shaking hands with regiments of dead people.
A few days after there was a nice little supper party, consisting of twelve gentlemen, where ghost, goblin and resurrection stories were related promiscuously, and I was presented with a fine case bearing a gold plate, containing the following: "To the hero of the 2d of December." I have never told the real state of my feelings on that never-to-be-forgotten night until now, and if this should meet the eye of any of our participants in that night's adventure (two of whom by the way are dead), they will be surprised to learn for the first time that the "hero" was the worst scared man of the whole party. Since then no inducement could prevail on me to dig up or assist in digging up a dead body, and I never have.

Yorktown.
Preparing for the Centennial Celebration of the Battle.
The following is the report of the sub-committee appointed by the joint congressional committee on the Yorktown centennial celebration, to prepare a programme of ceremonies at the dedication of the Yorktown monument:
The guests of the national government will assemble at Washington, October 18, 1881, and be received there with proper ceremonies by the congressional committee.
The committee will proceed, with the invited guests and such government officials as may join them, to Yorktown, to arrive there on the morning of the 19th. Preparation will be made during the morning for the landing of troops, and the oration and poem will be delivered at 2 o'clock p. m., with such accompanying services as the committee may determine. These services will consist of brief addresses of welcome by the governor of Virginia and others, an original ode, the laying of the cornerstone, with an address by the president of the United States, who will be invited to preside on the occasion. The exercises will be interspersed with music by the military bands present, and with salutes by the artillery.
On the 20th there will be a grand parade of all the military organizations present on the battle field, and a review by the president of the United States. The military exercises will conclude with a dress parade. A competent army officer will be selected to take command of the parade.
It is hoped that a naval review may be held on the 21st in the adjacent waters.
The governors of all the states will be invited to be present, with their military staffs and such military organizations as may wish to accompany them; and it is particularly desired that at least the thirteen original states should provide for as imposing a representation as possible by the presence of their civil officers and military organizations.
The committee would suggest, without presuming to give any directions in the matter, that each state provide itself with such means of transportation as will afford accommodation while present at the celebration, and will enable it to take part in any local services which may take place.
The details of the celebration will be arranged hereafter, and with the lists of invited guests, will be published for general information.

Quite a Ram.
The sum of $1,500 was offered to and refused by the owner of a ram exhibited at the recent sheep show of the Australian Sheep Raising Association, held at Melbourne, where many other valuable and meritorious were exhibited, the aggregate worth of which amounted to several thousand pounds. The animal in question was bred by Mr. Cumming, who paid $900 for its sire.

MEDICAL.
DAY'S KIDNEY PAD!

A DISCOVERY BY ACCIDENT,
which supplies a want men of eminent ability have devoted years of study and experiment to find a Specific for Diseases of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urinary Organs and Nervous System. From the time of its discovery has rapidly increased in favor, gaining the approval and confidence of medical men and those who have used it. It has become a favorite with all classes, and wherever introduced has superseded all other treatments. In short, such is its intrinsic merit and superiority, that it now the only recognized reliable remedy.

Is Strongly Endorsed.
We have the most unequivocal testimony to its curative powers from many persons of high character, intelligence and responsibility. Our book, "How a Life was saved," giving the history of this new discovery, and a large number of most remarkable cases, sent free. Write for it.
