SURNITURE.

DUECHASER LOOK!

A New Jersey Secress.

An Old Woman Who is the Sensation of There lives in Kingwood township, near Frenchtown, N. J., a woman about whom all the neighbors for miles around are excited, and whose fame promises to spread throughout the central portion of the state. Already the news of the wonderful power of prophecy which she possesses has reached the ears of the quiet farmers in the upper counties, and small parties come every day or two to visit her. Her name is Clark, and she is probably about sixtyfive years old. Born in Hunterdon county, she has, since her marriage, forty-three years ago, resided in various parts of Hun-terdon and Wrrren counties. The first indication of the power which she is believed to possess appeared in early life, during a Methodist revival. From a girl she had been of an emotional disposition, readily moved to tears, and sometimes completely prostrated by an appeal from the pulpit. It was during the nervous moments that she seemed imbued with the gift of remarkable foresight, and made predictions about the future weal or woe of her family and friends. Many of these prophecies are said to have been literally fulfilled. Her temperament and power of foretelling filled all her friends with a certain awe, which has always existed. Mrs. Clark is a sensible woman, however, and endeavored as best she could to drive away all fear of herself and her power, although maintaining her belief in some wonderful gift bestowed upon her. Wherever she hved, sooner or later, reports would be circulated respecting her nature, and she would be called upon to exercise her wis-

As the years passed, her nervous attacks are understood to have become mors frequent, and therefore, her prophetic utterances have been more numerous. Set:ling, some time ago, in her present home, she is known by every man, woman and child in the vicinity, and scarcely a person lives within a circuit of ten miles who has not had his or her history recounted and fortune told. If they came when the old lady was in robust health they sometimes failed to procure what they wished, for she then had neither inclination nor the talent to remove the veil from the future. There are some, of course, who deride the whole thing, and laugh at Mrs. Clark's predictions, but the majority of the rural folk, being more or less superstitious, have great faith in her sayings. Several cases of extreme melancholy and sickness are said to have been produced through unpleasant disclosures made by the old lady to the victims, and others have recovered from long illness when inspired with hope by an interview with the prophetess. The neighbors are usually loud in her praises, and declare in the most unqualified way that she has told them circumstances in their lives could not possibly have learned in the ordinary course of events. Hence their extreme faith in her predictions. Young men seek her advice regarding mare, and being given a description of their sweethearts, boldly lay siege to the damsel whose features she portrays, confidently expecting a favorable response.

Maidens of rustic beauty seek this oracle to ascertain the conduct of their lovers and many a country lad is believed to have been repulsed by some hideons revelation of his life during one of the nervous spells. Industrious husbandmen inquire as to the prospects for their crops, and the wayside grocer consults her as to the size of his next invoice of merchandise. While many of her clients insist that her power is that of the spiritualist or clairvoyant, the old lady herself protests against such an accusation. he makes no pretensions to be under the guide of an Indian chief or a great spirit of some kind, nor does she resort to any mysterious incantations. Her mode of procedure is by means of the palms of her hand or the veins of the temples. She requests her visitors to hold out the hand before her with the palm upwards and then dictates what seems to her to be the truth by reading the arrangement of veins. Her utterances come freely, seeming to require little study. Once in a while she hesitates, and will sometimes place her hand upon the inquirer's head. Considering the number of persons consulting her, there is very little repetition about her predictions. Her happiest faculty seems to be the right use of names, both past and future, and the graphic descriptions of places and persons. The age of the woman and the continual strain upon her nerves renders her life very uncertain and seems to increase the anxiety of those who have heard of her lest they should fail to have their future revealed before she dies.
