PHILADELPHIA.

The general improvement in business the past year, with the prospect of a very large increased demand for all kinds of Dress Goods, has induced all American buyers of Foreign Goods to place immense orders. This was naturally the case, so much so that, perhaps without exaggeration, 50 per cent. more goods were imported than the country could possibly consume. As a consequence, there has been a great break in prices in a great many fabrics, which we shall fully meet.

WE SHALL SELL

Former Price	Former Price
French Flannel Suitings $2.25	Camel's Hair Stripes $2.25
French Flannel Suitings $2.25	French Novelty $2.25
French Striped Fancies (all silk and wool) $2.25	French Fancies (very fancy goods) $2.25
French Shodas (in all colors) $2.25	English Novelty $2.25
French Brocades (all silk and wool) $2.25	French Handkerchiefs, squares $2.25
Plain French Flannels $2.25	French Novelty $2.25
Fine French Brocades (in several designs) $2.25	French Novelty $2.25

In addition to our offerings in the above goods, we have some lines of very choice goods of which it is difficult to meet the demand, in which we have a very choice assortment, both in cloth and colorings.

The Clothing Bargain Rooms.

The mass of the stocks selling below cost is so great that we may say there is no change from last week, except that a very few lines are exhausted—not enough to mention.

Large and complete stocks of new clothing of all grades, from common to fine, are here, going for less money than their original cost.

Remember, though, that still larger, though not more complete stocks are not marked down at all. You can buy out of either, as you may prefer.

These stocks have been separated for convenience in selling; but they are made together, in the same way, for the same purpose, and after the same standards.

FRIDAY EVENING, JAN. 29, 1881.

In the Palace of Truth.

Richard Turner, a lawyer, let us hope of future fame, returning from a "chance" night in an unenviable bad humor, found a certain little note awaiting him on his hand. It had just come, his landlady said, and slowly tearing open the envelope, he read as follows: "Dear Mr. Turner: Many thanks for your lovely flowers, which have been greatly admired. It was like your thoughtfulness to remember my birthday when I had almost forgotten it myself. I was so sorry to miss your call this afternoon. Sincerely yours, FLORENCE REDBURN."

A very gracious little note, but for some reason it appeared to afford its reader but small satisfaction. Dick read it twice with a curious look, then tossing it into the scrap basket, he lit a cigar, stretched himself in an easy chair and thoughtfully observed through the smoke wreaths that began to float around his head: "What a precious little bar she is! As if I didn't see her ten minutes later, was 'not at home' to me this afternoon, start out driving with Tom Baker in that confoundedly jumpy dog cart of his. Shouldn't wonder if he had jerked her out too before they got home; and serve her right, too! Why, Suip, what a fellow! I expect you're certain to understand why he had been slighted, was seeking to secure the master's notice by sitting upright and waving his front paws to and fro in a gentle and deprecating fashion."

"Did I hurt your feelings, poor little boy?" said Dick, tenderly. "Well, I wouldn't, I assure you, for a dozen little bits like Florence Redburn, but I do think, Suip, and I expect you're certain to understand why he had been slighted, was seeking to secure the master's notice by sitting upright and waving his front paws to and fro in a gentle and deprecating fashion."

"I don't know, but he was the last dog in the world to confess his ignorance, and he was certainly not a fool. He might have envied, he gave a mysterious little back that could mean anything and composed himself again to his seat."

"Just so, Suip," said Dick, consulting his watch. "In a few hours I'm to dress and go to Mrs. Grey's ball, the biggest bore of the season I haven't a doubt, but there is no escaping it. Aren't you glad, Suip, you don't have to go to balls?"

Ship barked again, this time in an affirmative manner. It always accommodated himself to his master's moods and was well accustomed to being questioned. Alert and vigilant he watched the cigar dwindle down by slow degrees, while he glanced at his watch, and then, as if by magic, he turned his head aside and fell fast asleep, while his little dog, curled contentedly around his feet, looked up at him with a certain air of self-satisfaction in his longest bright eyes.

Seven, 8, 9, 10. Was it possible that he had slept nearly two hours, and the clock was striking 10? Dick jumped up, and, with a skilled grasp prepared to undress himself into his dress suit. This was never a very rapid process with him, and by the time he entered Mrs. Grey's brilliantly lighted house the great clock in the hall was pointing to quarter past 11. The rooms were crowded and stiflingly hot. The very flowers appeared to droop under the glare and the heat, all except some deep red roses which had been arranged in a vase on a table in the center of the conversation. But Dick was drowsy and cross, and when the cigar was smoked out he turned his head aside and fell fast asleep, while his little dog, curled contentedly around his feet, looked up at him with a certain air of self-satisfaction in his longest bright eyes.

"I don't know, but he was the last dog in the world to confess his ignorance, and he was certainly not a fool. He might have envied, he gave a mysterious little back that could mean anything and composed himself again to his seat."

Sitting Up Nights.

Mrs. E. H. Perkins, Green Centre, Warren county, N. Y., writes: She has been troubled with Asthma for four years, had to sit up nights after night with it, she has taken two bottles of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, and is perfectly cured. She strongly recommends it and wishes to act as agent among her neighbors.
