Bernhardt's Jewels.

A Glance at Some of the French Artiste's Diamonds—Brilliant Geins, Etc. Mile, Sarah Bernhardt has a wonderful collection of diamonds and precious stones, about which little has yet been said in the newspapers. A portion of the gems were recently displayed in St. Louis and attracted large and curious crowds.

The Globe-Democrat of that city says:

The articles on exhibition are valued at els possessed by Mlle. Bernhardt. The most remarkable article in the collection is a stomacher of gold and precious stones, to which is attached a girdle of blazing diamonds, the entire piece being worn by the owner in each performance of Adrienne Lecouvreur, and presenting a won-derfully beautiful and brilliant appearance. The stomacher is valuable, not only for the metal and gems composing it, but because it is a sample of the old English or Etruscan work now so rare and upon which collectors place a very high estimate. It is the product of an art that was lost centuries ago. The stomacher is known at least to be 600 years old; it came originally from India and was in possession of the royal family of England until the Prince of Wales, on the ocsaive case of small pox. He was tendercasion of Mlle. Bernhardt's appearance in London, being dissatisfied with the girdle she wore in the role of Adrienne Lecouvreur, sent her the stomacher and girdle. which the Princess of Wales afterward told Mile. Bernhardt to keep. The body of the stomacher is of fine gold wire beaten out by hand; it is 12 to 14 inches in length and 3 in width. Upon this space are set six cups of filigree gold, each containing large turquoises, emeralds and rubies. The girdle is studded with dia-monds. The appearance of the article is beautiful in the extreme, and its money value is at least $5,000. To a collector it would be worth double that amount. A diamond necklace of rosettes, sprays and leaves is the next piece. The article is supposed to present a rustic scene, and the design is marvelously wrought out, every detail being skilfully and artistically finished. There are six rosettes on the front of the necklace, each having a 2-carat front of the necklace, each having a 2-carat brilliant in the centre, and the rest of the flower being richly imbedded with small stones. There are more than 100 diamonds in each rosette, and the jewels appear like flowers of light when seen in a gas-illuminated room. The rosettes are held flowers of light when seen in a gas-illuminated room. The rosettes are held together by strings of diamonds, which are plainly seen at the ends of the necklace, and each flower may be unscrewed from the chain and used for a hair

A string of diamonds, or, more appropriately speaking, a yard of diamonds, is next to be seen. The string, which is of the best gold, is not less than three feet in length, and diamonds of all sizes for the string. in length, and diamonds of all sizes, from the smallest up to one caret in weight, are imbedded in its full length. There are over 1,000 different stones in the string, which may be worn as a loose necklace, outlining the shape of the bodice with a continuous line of light. From the string a pendant, imbedded with diamonds, supports a massive horseshoe of diamonds, the emblem of "good luck" measuring four inches across, and the surface of the shoe being illuminated with jets of flame from 500 stones. All around the shoe there is a row of seventeen large diamonds, none lighter than one carat. The value of the piece is placed at $2,000. A bracelet of alternate diamonds and sapphires, twelve squares each, with four carat diamond set in each square and a single 3-carat sapphire occupying each of the other squares, is a remarkably beauti-ful and valuable piece of jewelry. The settings are superb, and the appearance of the bracelets surpasses anything in the line of ornaments that the writer has ever seen. The value of this single piece is Another bracelet, consisting of twentyfour two carat diamonds, is a charming affair, and is estimated to be worth $4,000. A golden crown, four inches long and two inches deep, with diamond and sapphire settings, is one of the extraordinary hair ornaments of which there are so many in the collection. The crown has nin-points, each tipped with a carat stone. It is imbedded with five large and glowing sapphires, surrounded by rows of small and large diamonds. The value of the crown is $1,000. Another hair ornament is a crocodile, six inches in length, with outstretched feet and wriggling body, the animal being depicted in the act of moving. The amphibian is a mass of diamonds there being 200 or 300 stones in the body, the brilliants being of all sizes, and the value is placed at $1,000. A third bracelet in the collection is a string of emeralds, of a rich sea-green color flanked by smaller strings of diamonds. In all there are thirty-four stones in the bracelet, eighteen of them emeralds, each weighing from one to three carats. Each diamond weighs three-fourths of a carat. The emeralds are the most valuable portion of the jewel, the color being a clear green and the brightest and purest ever seen in this market. The value of the bracelet is $2,000. A drop or pendant holds a place in the collection and is one of the finest specimens of the true yellow diamond now extant. The color is perfect and is as plainly visible by gas light as during the day. The gem is in the shape of a bottle, weight 15 carats, and could not be purchased for less gether. than $3,000. The cutting of the stone is as remarkable as its quality, and, alto-gether, the pendant is a magnificent piece of work, reflecting the utmost credit upon the lapidary who turned it out. It represents great and difficult labor, and had to stand a test that might have made the stone comparatively valueless but for the skill of the man who handled it.

A crescent with five hundred to six hundred diamonds of all sizes, some as heavy as one carat, is a fourth hair ornament. It

The fifth ornament for the hair is a huge butterfly, whose wings, if extended, would measure ten inches from tip to tip. As it is, three wings are shown, each heavily im-bedded with diamonds whose brightness is beautifully relieved by rows of beryl-cut sapphires. The butterfly's head is a mass of diamonds, and the eyes are glowing red rubies. Two white pearl: of enormous size and beautiful sheen represent the sections of the body, being set in a bed of diamonds. The beryl-cut sapphires weigh from three-fourths of a carat to three carats each. The entire butterfly is valued

A Kiss of Death.

A Wife Fatally Embraces her Dead Hus. Coronor Janney on Saturday investi-gated the cause of the death of Mrs. Emma E. Careless, of Philadelphia who was reported to have taken her own life from grief at the death of ber husband. The evidence showed that Mrs. Careless was 23 years of age and of prepossessing appear ance. She was married in 1876. In the early part of last week her husband, George Careless, jr., was stricken down with sickness. It was not at first known severe case of small pox. He was tenderly nursed at his father's house by his wife. In spite of all the efforts made to restore him to health he rapidly sank lower until he died on last Friday afternoon.

During her husband's sickness Mrs.

Careless would scarcely leave the room. Every whim of the patient was humored by the tender wife who lingered at his bedside. When all was over, George Careless, the father of the deceased, went into the room and attempted gently to lead the grief-stricken watcher away. Mrs. Careless then for the first time seemed to realize that her husband and the father of her two little children was really dead. She sprang from her fatherin-law's arms and embraced the body lying rigid on the bed passionately kissing the lips, eyes and face. No amount of say where? He was a capable clerk, and entreaty could get her away. Her fatherin-law at length attempted to force her

A doctor was immediately sent for, but after the first excitement was over the woman seemed to suffer very little from her wound. She was even able to get up and walk around. She several times exclaimed, however, that if that would not kill her she would shoot herself again. The physician advised her not to go to the funeral of her husband on Sunday, but she would not listen to him, and when her father-in-law seemed to hesitate about taking her, she told him that if he did not take her to her husband's funeral she would never forgive him as long as she lived. Mr. Careless was at length prevailed upon, and obtaining a carriage took her to the funeral. Killing Her Two Children and Then Try-ing to Kill Herself.

A most terrible case of murder and suicide has occurred at Whitevale, a thriving village in the township of Pickering, Ontario county, on the Toronto and Nippissing railroad. Some time early in the morning, Mrs. Shepard, a resident of the village, murdered her two children and then inflicted such injuries upon herself that she cannot possibly survive. Shepard is a well-to-do farmer in Markham township, and Mrs. Shepard is a doughter of Mr. and Mrs. Shepard is a daughter of Mr William Steeper, a neighboring farmer. They have been married about five years. It is supposed they did not live happily to-

A woman named Ressor, who has been in the habit of visiting Mrs. Shepard, tells the following story: "About nine clock I went over to see if she needed anything, and when I reached the door. but before opening it, I thought I heard a strange noise inside. I listened a moment and heard it again, a strange gurgling sound. Knowing that Mrs. Shepard was subject to very severe fits of vomiting, supposed that was what the matter and opened the door and walked into the kitchen. I did not observe Mrs. Shepard at first, but on the floor beside the bed lay the body of George. Just behind the stove the baby was lying in a pool of blood, its throat cut from ear to ear. Turning, I saw Mrs. Shepard lying curled up at the other side of the room covered with blood, her head turned almost under her body, so that I could not see her face. She was apparently dead and the floor was covered with blood. A buther knife and revolver were lying on the floor. I was unable to move for an instant and then I ran out

The neighbors soon gathered in and took what care they could of Mrs. Shepard, who was not dead, as first supposed. The house in which the Shepards live is a stone building, one and a half stories high. On the ground floor are the kitchen and two bed rooms. In the centre of the kitchen A fourth bracelet is in the shape of a serpent; its body is composed entirely of diamonds, there being at least 200 stones in it and the left cupboard. At the right side of the stove lay the oldest boy, George, a bright little follows there are the composed entirely of side of the stove lay the oldest boy, George, stands the stove, at the right hand a table, a bright little fellow, three years of age. He had been shot with a revolver and struggle beyond his clenched fists. The A string of pearls is shown which has balt had gone through his heart and he lay with outstretched arms, his face as tebit-tid calm and peaceful as if he were asleep. No blood had come from the wound; there was no disfiguring; no gaping wounds to shock the eye of the beholder. In striking contrast lay the other child, only seven months old. It lay in a pool of blood, its head almost completely severed by the cruel stroke of the knife, the poor little limbs twisted convulsively, show-

still sufficient strength to crawl to the door, which Mrs. Ressor had left wide open when she ran out, and to close it, and then drag herself to a chair, against which she was leaning when Mr. White and the others entered. Between the two children lay the revolver and near Mrs. Shepard lay the knife. In the evening Mrs. Shepard rallied sufficiently to relate how she did the murder and what caused her to do it. She said George had disobeyed her commands several times and at last she became earaged, and, seizing the revolver, she shot him. She had evidently stood dis rectly over him, as the ball ball entered the left breast, high up toward the neck. and passed down through the heart. After killing George she thought she might as well kill herself and the baby, so she had taken the knife and cut the poor little thing's throat and thrown it on the floor. She then shot herself in the left breast, the ball striking a rib and passing round the body. She next shot herself in the throat, and then taking the knife had stabbed herself in the throat several times, cutting her chin in a fearful manner, and finally had drawn the knife across her throat,
