Walt Whitman on Cariyle. And so the flame of the lamp, after long waiting and flickering, has gone out en-

As a representative author, a literary figure, no man else will bequeath to the future more significant hints of our stormy era, its fierce paradoxes, its din, and its struggling paturition period that Carlyle. He belongs to our branch of the stock, too; neither Latin nor Greek, but altogether Gothic. Rugged, mountainous, volcanic, he was himself more a French revolution than any of his volumns.

In some respects, so far in the nineteenth century, the best equipt, keenest mind, even from the college point of view, of all Britain; only he had an ailing body. Dyspepsia is to be traced in every page, and now and then fills the page. One may include among the lessons of his life—even though that life stretched to amazing length—how behind the tally of genius and morals stands the stomach and gives a sort of casting vote.

Two conflicting antagonistic elements seem to have contended in the man, sometimes pulling him different ways, like wild horses. He was a cautious, conservative Scotchman, fully aware what a feetid gasbag much of modern radicalism is; but then his great heart demanded reform, demanded change-and always sympathetic, always human heart-often terribly at odds with his scornful brain.

No author ever put so much wailing and despair into his books, sometimes palpable, oftener latent. He reminds me of that passage in Young's poems where as death presses closer and closer for its prey the soul rushes hither and thither, appealing, shricking, berating, to escape the

Of short-comings, even positive blur spots from an American point of view, he had a serious share; but this is no time for specifying them. When we think how great changes never go by jumps in long preparations, processes, awakenings, are indispensable, Carlyle was the most serviceable democrat of the age.

How he splashes like a leviathan in the seas of modern literature and polities! Doubtless, respecting the latter, one needs first to realize, from actual observation, the squalor, vice and doggedness ingrained in the bulk of population of the British islands, with the red tape, fatuity, the flunkeyism everywhere to understand the last meaning of his pages. the most indignant comment or protest anent the fruits of fuedalism in Great Brittain-the increasing poverty and degradation of the homeless, landless 20,000,-000, while a few thousands, or rather a few hundreds, possess the entire soil, the money and fat berths. Trade and shipping, and clubs, and prestige, and guns, and a fine, select class of gentry and aris-tocracy with every modern improvement, cannot begin to salve or defend such stupendous hoggishness. For the last three years we in America have had transmitted glimpses of Carlyle's prostration and bodily decay-pieures of a thin-bodied, lonesome, wifeles, childless, very old man, lying on a sofa, kept out of bed by indomitable will, but, of late, never well enough to take the open air. News of this sort was brought us last fall by the sick man's neighbor, Moncure Conway; and I have noted it from time to time in brief descriptions in the stroll between 8 and 9 o'clock. In the fine cold night, unusually clear (February 5, '81), as I walked some open grounds a ljacent, the condition of Carlyle. quently died in jail. and his approaching—perhaps even then actual—death filled me with thoughts, eluding statement and curiously blending with the scene. The planet Venus, an hour high in the West, with all her volume and lustre recovered (she has been shorn and languid for nearly a year), including an additional sentiment I never noticed before-not merely voluptuous, Paphian, steeping, fascinating, now with calm, commanding, dazzling, seriousness and hauteur-the Milo Venus now. siopeia, Castor and Pollux, and the two Dippers.

While through the whole of this silent, While through the whole of this silent, indescribable show, enclosing and bathing line pistols at his head, rushed upon him my whole receptivity, ran the thought of Carlyle dying. (To soothe and spiritualize and, as far as may be, solve the mystery of death and genius, consider them under the stars at midnight.)

And now that he has some lenger and its model of the model of

And now, that he has gone hence, can it be that Thomas Carlyle, soon to chemi cally dissolve in ashes and by winds, remains an identity still? Inways, perhaps, eluding all the statements, lore and speculation of ten thousand years-eluding all possible statements to mortal sense—does he yet exist, a definite, vital being, a spirit, an individual—perhaps new wafted in space among those stellar systems which, suggestive and limitless as they are, merely edge more limitless, far more suggestive systems?

I have no doubt of it. In silence, of fine night, such questions are answered to the soul, the best answers that can to some specially sad event or tearing problem, I wait till I go out under the stars for the last voiceless ratisfaction. WALT WHITMAN.

The mob ordered all the lights out, fired a reglar fusilade of shots to intimidate any would-be rescuers, dragged the five captives to the east door of the court house, where ropes were awaiting them. The ropes were suspended from the veranda above. The five bodies in an instant were swinging beneath the veranda. Jim Elder was the only one who struggled, and he was quickly thrown down, bound hand and foot and then hanged with the others. The mob guarded the bodies until they were sure that their work was completed and life extinct. The leader then gave the "Disperse, my men, to your order, homes," and the executioners-some 200 given. Cleveland dispatch to the Herald. Mr. Emory B. Storrs, of Chicago, en route to his home from New York, stopped off here for the purpose of writing General Garfield a long letter on the situation in the East. He refused to submit to an interview at first, but finally yielded after considerable solicitation. He said that he went to New York upon the invitation of a number of prominent Republican poirticians for the purpose of using his influence to harmonize the many elements in the party. He dined with Hamilton Fish and the Union League club, meeting with all political shades and grades, and found the only way to adjust matters in a satisfactory way was to propose a compromise. He did not see Senator Conkling, but talked with a number of his "right hand" men. He also had an interview with General Grant and learned from him what terms Mr. Conkling would probably agree to. Messrs. Grant and Conkling, so Storrs said, were closeted together for four hours previous to the latter's trip to Menter. Said Mr. Storrs, when quistioned con-cerning Mr. L. P. Morton's place in the cabinet : " Mr. Morton's business being that of a banker, and his firm being engaged in dealing with government securi-ties, would disqualify him under an act of Congress from holding the position of secretary of the treasury. The objections to Mr. Morton's appointment do not proceed from any distrust of his ability nor dislike to him as a gentleman. Mr. Conkling's friends do not look upon the appointment of Mr. Morton as a probability, and are prepared to acquiesce most cordially in its absolute to acquiesce most cordially in its acquiesce acquiesce most cordially in its absolute to acquiesce most cordially in its acquiesce acquiesc

master general?" "Mr. James is very popular and should remain where he is. The leading men of the state would like a larger place than the postoffice department for New York." "What would best suit all interests in New Yerk and harmonize all elements." " Everybody cannot be suited, but I be lieve the appointment of Charles G. Folger as secretary of the treasury would give the largest amount of satisfaction to the larger proportion of the party. The objection is that he ought not to be withdrawn from the bench of the court of appeals, of which he is now chief justice. I think the friends of Mr. Conkling would, in the main, be satisfied with the selection Accordingly, though he was no chartist ground, hanged him to the limb of a tree of Mr. Foiger, who has a good deal of p or radical, I considered Carlyle's by far repeatedly until he was almost unconscious litical sagacity, is a most skillful debater, singed his body with torches and lacerated and a man of most remarkable independ and mutilated him with knives in the en- ence of thought and personal popularity deavor to compel him to admit that he I think that the appointment of a secre portion of the West, would excite dis

In a private conversation Mr. Storrs said that Judge Folger had been telegraphed by General Garfield to visit him and that the judge would come West immediately. Mr. Storrs gave the gentleman with whom he conversed to understand that all disagreements had been settled in New York and that General Grant is to be credited with the submission of Conkling.

Seven Negroes Lynched. The country is in a fever-heat of excitement over the wholesale lynching which occurred Friday night. The tragedy which culminated in the lynching of the five negroes implicated in the murder of Mr. Laprade, makes a total of ten deaths which have thus far resulted from the fearful butchery. The crime for which these negroes were lynched was the murder of a farmer named Laprade, who lived alone near Sadlersville, Robinson county, about a mile away from any neighbor. The report was current that he and his two brothers had fallen heirs to $9,000 nine negroes went to his house on and imitating the voice of Laprade's brother, asked for admission. Laprade opened the door without thought of harm. The nine negroes rushed in upon him, knocked him down and then demanded all his money. He gave them $5, saying that was all he had. Throwing a rope around his neck they dragged him about his ground have the limb of a track had concealed the money, but always with tary of the treasury whose financial views the same result. With the rope he was were at all uncertain or hazy, from any dragged about the yard, and nameless outrages were committed upon his person. Finally his legs were cut and hacked, and the tendons torn from their places from the knee down. Then his skull was

The discovery of the murder caused inense excitement, and threats of lynching were freely made against the murderers as soon as they should be apprehended. Suspicion fell upon Jim Higgins and, after being imprisoned some days, he made a confession implicating his associates, who were arrested. Higgins, who was an old negro, was taken out and his feet burned papers. A week ago I read such an item before I started out for my customary given the details of the Laprade murder. The prisoners, including Higgins, were brought to the Nashville jail. Higgins had one of his feet amputated and subse-
