I last saw him here when he had finished the invention lighted, at thirty-cents apiece. The parent company pays Edison for these lamps, and furnishes them free to consumers. The New York company covers North and South America. The patent right for Europe is owned by Edison himself, Mr. Lowery and the Drexels. The capital now put into gas companies ame mts to $60,-

In art proper it is subject and treatment; in applied art it is subject and decoration; and in some kinds; third idea has to be kept going, that of mate thus addresses an owl perched on a snowrial. Here the last is not necessary, but laden branch : decorative ideas are even more important than well chosen or striking subjects. There are not a few persons who have sent such lovely little gems of water colors that they must be professionals—perhaps even members of the Salmagundi, that fertile nursery of good designers and good water-colorists. But they have overlooked the absolute necessity of marrying their design to a treatment purely decorative, either mingling with the subject or partially separated by a border. So excellent is some of the figure drawing that these humble designs would not show badly in a watercolor exhibition, and as no artist who has real stuff in him can fail to know it, there will be some terribly disappointed people when the judges have made their decision. heavy grades toward Mexico. In the right hand corner instead of rosettes there are circles with beautiful cherub heads. This smacks rather of Japanese feeding in decoration, though it is very far from being imitative of Japanese art. The beautiful things are endless. Some represent actually mediaval spray-work in illuminations; one gives the beautiful head of a child in the most exquisite of night caps, posed in a blue circle which isolates it in the Japanese way, while above, old Santa Claus is driving over the snow-covered roof; another gives a lovely child in a red hood clasping a Bible in which is a sprig of holly, and behind her a little landscape; another shows in water color a mother arranging a Christmas tree close to the cot of a sleeping golden-haired youngster; another represents a winged cherub, very rosy and plump, hugging two obese owls of enormous dimensions; anvery liquid water with superb foliage dled in the burn fra simmer daun till dine." This, it must be confessed, is more comic than Christmas-like. But the pearl of of the funny one is a fat little giri with absolutely no clothing save a fashionable fur hat, a pair of red socks tipped with fur and a large sable muff. The exhibition will owe much of its attractiveness to the artistic manner in which it has been arranged by the personal exertions of Mr. Moore himself.
