DEATH OF CLEM SEILES.

Wild Flights of Reckless Newsmongers. At the sale on Saturday afternoon in Caernarvon township, two miles north-west of Churchtown, of the effects of the late Jacob Sander, a number of young men engaged in a game of corner ball, as is the custom in that section at sales. During the game a ball thrown by Barton Yohn struck Clement Skiles on the left ear. He experienced no serious difficulty from the blow at first. He afterwards played off two corners and one full game, then put on his overcoat, went into the barn to lie down without saying a wood about being hit or feeling ill. In a short time he call for Wm. Seiverling, a half brother, and asked him several times to forgive him, saying, "You know what for, and you must forgive me." Directly after which he became unconscious and was carried to the house, where under the care of Drs. Irwin, Lincoln and Zell, he lingered until Sunday morning at 5 o'clock, when he expired. During the night the blood oozed from his nose, month and cars. No inquest was held and as yet the exact cause of his death is unknown, whether from internal injuries sustained by jumping (as he was a lofty tambler) or from a stroke of the Mr. Yohn, as the stroke from the ball was purely accidental. The body was interred in the cemetery at the Centre church, Breckneck township.

Skiles was a young man of pleasant expression, obliging in his disposition, of vigorous frame and quite an athlete, being especially fond of the fox chase and almost as fleet of foot and untiring as a hound. He was the son of a daughter of old Jacob Weller, whose mysterious murder in the "Forest" some yeaas ago has never been traced to its perpetrator. Skiles was arrested at the time, together with nearly all the others of the family, and held to trial, but there was no substantial evi dence against him ever disclosed and he was acquitted without a trial.

However, the violent but not by any means remarkable cause to which Skiles's death may apparently be traced, has furnished occasion for the revival of activity on the part of the sensational scribes who never fail to miss, present and distort everything published in connection with the Weller family and the Welsh mountains. A correspondent, presumably, of the Examiner contents himself with modestly trying the Weller murder case over and convicts Skiles of complicity in it. The truth is there never was any real evidence connecting Skiles with the marder. The officiousness and stapidity of an ignorant and overpaid detective led to his arrest without any justification. His defense could have been made as complete as the prosecution was baseless and no intelligent person in the neigborhood ever cherished any idea of his guilt.

The New York Sun is advised from Reading of the death of "Clement Skiles, a young man whose name has been associated with the very worst crimes attributed to the Welsh Mountain band of robbers," and that 'alle was a dangerous man." The Herald publishes a dispatch from the same source, doubtless, in which he is spoken of as one "whose fame as one of the leaders of the notorious Welsh Mountain gang of robbers is known all over this section." He is spoken of as an outlaw, responsible for his grandfather's murder, and it is added that "there were several other butcheries perpetrated in the same vicinity were made after Skiles had been acquitted of the first tragedy."

just. Skiles had nothing to do with the was gang of petty thieves who range over the Welsh mountains, and was never connect ed with them nor so suspected in any way He was a good-natured, well liked, harm less boy as far from being an "outlaw as possible; and he never, we believe, was accused of any crime except the murder of his grandfather, in which no one now be lieves that he had any part. No violent death has previously occurred in the Weller family except that of the old man, nor any other " horrible butchery in that neighborhood. The Wellers are a poor set of harmless people, living in a spouse for the "retired brewer" and wild and desolate region, and the old man was the victim of a mysterous, cruel mur- any der; but with that exception there is lit. of the evening's amusement. Captle foundation for the sensational stories lain Donisius Puff, the newspaper republished about them.
