FRIDAY EVENING, MAR. 4, 1831.

In the Far West.

Lancaster County Farmers in Nebraska. "J. T." in Oxford Press. After spending a time at Lincoln'(Neb.) we took a nor hwesterly direction on one of the branch roads, disembarking at a little town known as Woodlawn. We were in quest of an old friend, who came out here about a year ago from Laneaster county, Pa., a few miles from Oxford. We had ascertained while in Lincoln that our friend Moses Brinton lived on section 33. range 6, but being ignorant of the "lay" of the land we repaired to the postoffice in Woodlawn and put the question to the first being that we encountered for the habitation of the object of our search. Fortunately the man was conversant with the country, and appeared to be familiar with everybody within a radius of ten miles. We followed him to an eminence not far distant from the store, and pointing with 139 North Queen street, Lancaster, Pa. his whole arm to a still greater eminence about two miles away, he remarked that that was where Moses Brinton lived. We turned our eye in the direction indicated, and saw a good sized house loom up quite plain, situated upon the very pinnacle of what appeared to be almost a mountain. The trail for us to pursue to reach this place was very kindly pointed out to us by our gentlemanly guide. "You see that large white house," said he, "That's the Lancaster county poor house. Keep close to that, and continue climbing the hill, and you're sure to get there. A poor house," we exclaimed, "and do you have poor houses in this country? Not many inmates." eneried we. The man eyed us for a second, and then replied: "O about a dozen, but it will be full e'er long. If this severe weather continues much longer, we'll all have to go." Not wishing to pursue this melancholy subject any longer

After plodding through the snow and over the hills we at last reached the residence of our friend Brimon, where we were kindly welcomed by the family, and there enjoyed his hospitality for a comple of days. We were royally entertained during our stay, and left with the regret that we couldn't remain longer. During all our travels and experiences in the West we have never been under a more hospit. able roof, nor entertained in that homelike way so characteristic or the people of old Chester county, then we were during our brief sojourn out here on these Nebraska prairies; and as our mond reverts back to the haloyon slays of boyhood among the pleasant hill; and valleys of Eastern Penns, Ivania, we were compelled to battle with our manly nature to drive back, the tear of regret that a comple who have reared a goodly family of boys and girls among the piece act sucromadings of Lancaster county, should come West, leaving behind them their devoted children, settled in good and comfortable homes, and commence life arrow, as it were, after they have aheady gone some distance on life's Jarracy beyond the meridian. Again I say I regret to see set tled upon these bleak and lonesome prairies persent who have passed the accord mile post in the race of life, b cause it does not seem natural that the couple who have attained their two score and ten and three seere years should leave their friends and relatives among whom they have lived for hill a century, to come West at that time of life as pioneers to break the way for the coming genera-

I hope the reader will not distort my meaning or constrae what I have written ern immigration. I do not. It is just the country for young men, who, if they live the usual time allotted to man, will see all this country peopled as thickiv as Chester coun- Health, Hope and Happiness Rety, with quite as confortable homes.

It is only a question of time when under their munificem tree culture act, there will be as much thuber here as in Pennsylvania, with all the luxuries and comfort now boasted of in the East. The soil is peculiarly adapted to the growth of all sorts of vegetation, and all fruit, unless it be the peach, which does not seem to thrive. Through the kindness of Will Brinton we had the pleasure of a pleasant drive up the Oak creek for several miles, here we saw many thrifty apple orchards, which from all appearances were doing quite as well as the same kind of trees in Perusylvania, Maryland, New Jersey or New York. The only drawback I can see New York. The only drawback I can see to successful failt culture is the high wind which prevails all through this country. Gathering force as it sweeps over these prairies it grows at these pretty strong. This will, however, obviate this objection as forces culture becomes more universal and the trees that are now planted become mature councils to be of some hindrance to the winds.

You generally have the Russian on one side, the fair-haired Norwegian on another, the German on another, the Frenchman on another, the Frenchman on another, and so on; but I find our friend Brinton very fortunate in this respect. This section is settled by a good classs of This section is settled by a good classs of American born citizens, intelligent, free and open-hearted people.

Adjoining Mr. Brinton's place on the east resides Charley Moore, late of Bart township, Lanca dec county. He was, they tell me, one of the heaviest stock breeders in the county, having, I believe, as much as $20 000 invested in that kind of property. He did not make a success of it, so he came out here last winter and purchased three hundred and twenty acres of railroad lands and is now giving his exclusive attention to raising sheep and hops. He has some eight hundred head of the former, all doing well. As sheepraising is one of the most remanerative industries of the West, he will no doubt in a few years reap a tich harvest for his

The earn crop in Nebraska was a partial facing list season, consequently Mr. Brinton, being his first season, had very little, yet he is feeding fifty hogs. He expects to increase this number next season several fold, when he will plant some seventy live to a lumified acres of corn. A short distance from Mr. Brinton's Joseph Hallowell, his brother in law owns a farm, but as his business requires him in Lincoln most of the time.

he does very little farming. Mr. Brinton prides himself on his superb location for obtaining a fair view of the surrounding country. After a cursory view of the situation I am inclined to think he will "carry of the palm." Lin-coln is plainly visible in the southwest five miles distant, while, look which way you will-to your right, lett or back, and you will see the iron horse speeding swiftly over the prairies.
