THURSDAY EVENING MAR. 10, 1881. THIRTY YEARS IN AN ARK.

THE HOME POP BEONSON GOT BE-CAUSE HE DIDN'T LIKE HOUSES.

One of the Pioneer Planters of Oysters in the Harlem—A Free Thinker and His Own Lawyer—The Death of the Old Oysterman.

Seventy-six years ago Leonard H. Bronson was born on a farm in Lichfield, Conn. Some twenty-five or twenty-six years later, Bronson came to New York to engage in oyster planting, and it wasn't long before he was well and popularly known among the oystermen of this region as "Captain" Bronson. Of late years every one has called him "Pop" Bronson. He lived and died in a canal boat moored up on the Harlem river. He was one of the first men, if not the very first, to plant seed oysters in the Harlem river, and he had beds extending for some distance up from High Bridge. With his oyster boat he fished in the North and East rivers, abundantly stocked his beds, and by industry and thrift he saved a comfortable fortune for himself and family.

Between the pursuit of agriculture and the cultivation of oysters, "Pop" Bronson never had much time to attend school. But he improved his few opportunities and when books came in his way he read them eagerly and sometimes went out of his way to get them. He read the radical writings of Tom Paine and became his disciple. In some way, too, he learned some law and distinguished himself on one occasion by defending himself in a lawsuit and winning his case. A man who knew him, and who heard his speech in court, said : "And he rather closed up the judge, I tell you." His learning won him the respect of all of his fellow oystermen, who looked up to him and bowed down to him.

"Pop" Bronson was called an odd ge-nius, and his oddities usually consisted in doing as he pleased, without much respect for prevailing customs and notions. Thus, in the matter of living, he didn't like a house, because most people in those days, as now, lived in houses. He owned, and his widow still owns, two houses and eight lots in Fordham. But the old cap-tain by brevet said "he didn't want to be smothered in a house," with a contemptuous emphasis on house; so he bought him a canal boat that had been in the grain and feed transportation, and had it towed into the Harlem river, out of the reach of breakers. Anchor was dropped about thirty years ago into the mud near the mouth of Sherman's creek, an inlet on the west shore, near what would be West 206th street if that thoroughfare existed. This neighborhood is now included in Inwood. About this same time old "Tan" Reeder, the famous Seventh Warder, was building what was then his pretentious brick house in South street, on the bank Bronson lived there in his cozy boat. · He called it " Noah's Ark," and then began daughter by his first wife married Mr. Holbrook of the New Orleans Picayune, ter by this marriage. His son Napoleon Brouson, went to sea and he never was heard of again. A daughter by his second wife was sent by the superintendent of the New York schools to San Francisco, where for years she was well-known as a successful principal in one of the public schools there. She afterward married a banker in San Fran cisco. His third wife is now his widow, and lives in the Ark with a son and daughter. The son is an oyster planter, and is caring for the beds which his father planted. A stepson, Wm. May, who was at one time in the business with "Pop" Bronson, still follows the taciturn oyster to its death in Harlem. For a year the veteran oysterman has been unable to go on deck. Confined to his cabin and his berth by sickness, his view of the world has been bounded on four sides by the small window of his state-room and confined to the Harlem river and the neighborhood of Fordham landing, nearly opposite. He died peacefully and suddenly on Friday, Feb. 25. and was buried from his boat in Woodlawn cemetery. In his early life in New York "Pop" Bronson was reputed a wit, and his contributions of sketches and anecdotes to some of the local papers were read with admiration by those who knew the author. Later he wrote less, but he was always merry, popular and eccentric.

"Noah's Ark," where this interesting old man lived for so long, is a most at-tractive habitation. Without, it looks like any other canal boat which might have drifted ashore there. It has missed painting for a long time, but within it has advantages which the most clegant or the most commodious house in Fifth avenue can never possess. Inhabitants of flats will appreciate what it is to have no "dark" rooms and no light shafts. "dark" rooms and no light shafts.

Dwellers anywhere would enjoy the
commands. The scenery of the Harlem river is quiet, but it is beautiful, and from the little square windows of his cozy cabin "Pop" Bronson loved to rest his eyes upon the natural vista without and beyond. The interior, too, was a revelation to a stranger entering. The cabin is fitted up in the most comfortable fashion. Paintings and prints are upon the slanting walls, and knick-knacks here and there fill in with artistic effect the spaces of the parlor. The galley, or the kitchen, where Mrs. Bronson presides, is small, but there are no flights of tiresome stairs up which the coal must be carried for the kitchen fire, which glows in the tidily kept stove. This apartment is in the stern of the boat. Amidships is the grand saloon or parlor, while forward are the sleeping rooms. In summers past Mr. Bronson used to take a few boarders who agreed with him in appreciating the beauties of his surroundings and mode of life.

The man who gets bit twice by the same dog is better adapted for that kind of business than any other. There is a great deal of religion in this world that is like a life preserver, only put on at the moment of immenent danger and then half the time put on hind side before. Experience is a school where a man learns what a big fool he has been. The man who doesn't believe in any were no saw mills, no nails, and few tools in the country. Its galleries and pews, even its floor, are hewn out of solid logs, and put together with wooden pegs. Here Maturin Ballou preached the gospel, and his son, his grandson and great grandsons after him to the tenth generation. A race of preachers sprang from this pioneer minister, as well as many lawyers. neer minister, as well as many lawyers, doctors and other public men, eminent for their talents and force of character. Some of them figured in the American Revolution as heroic in war as they were renowned in peace.

Abram Garfield and Eliza Ballon, both emigrants from the state of New York, were married in 1821. They had gone in 1830 to Orange, Cuyaboga county, Ohio, where a year later their son James was born, being their fourth child. Their log house was built when the heavy forest was but partly cleared away. The fences were not yet made about the fields when the father, in fighting a forest fire that threat-ened the destruction of their home, overheated himself, was suddenly chilled and in a few days died. His last words to his wife, as he looked upon his children, were : "I have planted four saplings here in this forest. I must now leave them to your

A happier family never dwelt in a palace than had been in that cabin home. Little James was but 18 months old when his father died—too young to understand the irreparable loss, or feel the pangs of grief that well-nigh crushed other hearts. The neighbors came-only four or five families in a radius of ten miles—and wept with the widow and the fatherless. With their assistance the lifeless form was enclosed in a rough coffin and buried in a corner of the wheat field near by. No sermon, no prayer except the silent prayers that went up from aching hearts. Winter was approaching. Could human experience be more dreary than a woman left a widow alone with her children in a wilderness swept by wintry storms. The howl of the wolves and the cry of the panthers never sounded so terrible as during those desolate winter nights. It seemed to the weary ones that spring would never come again. But at last it did come, and swept away the snow and ice. The dead things of the field and forest returned to life, save only the dead in the corner of the wheat field and hope was not revived in the cabin. There was no money in the house, there was a dedt on the farm, and the food supply was limited.

Then Mrs. Garfield sought the advice of a neighbor, who had been kind in her time of trouble. He advised her to sell the farm, pay the debt and return to her friends, believing it to be impossible for her to support herself and children there. Her reply was characteristic:

"I can never throw myself and my children upon the charity of friends. So long as I have health I believe my Heavenly Father will bless these two hands and make them able to support my children. My dear husband made this home at the sacrifice of his life and every log in this cabin is sacred to me now. It seems to me a holy trust that I must preserve as faithfully as I would guard his grave." Her neighbors left her, and she went to the friend that never fails, and asked God to make the way of duty clear to her; and when she came from her place of prayer she felt that new light and strength had been given to her. She called her oldest son, Thomas, to her, and, though he was only a child 10 years old, she laid the whole case before him. With the resolute courage of his race, he gladly promised that he would plow and sow, cut wood and milk the cows, if she would only keep the farm. So this brave mother and son commenced their work. She sold part of the farm, and paid every dollar of debt.

Thomas procured a horse, plowed and sowed and planted. The mother, with her own hands, split the rails, and completed the fencing. But the harvest was still far away, and the corn was running low. The mother carefully measured her precious grain, counted the days to the reaping time, and finding it would be exhausted long before that at their present rate of consumption, she resolved to live on two meals a day herself, that her children might not suffer. Then, as the little store rapidly disappeared, she ate but a single meal herself, concealing her self denial from her children until the blessed harvest brought relief. That year it was very abundant, and the wolf of hunger never came so near their door again. Still, there were many years of hardship and self-denial, in which the brave woman had to be father and mother, teacher and preacher to her children. She was the wise and tender friend, guiding them in the right way, and inspiring them to choose the best things in life. She still lives to see her great reward, "and her children rise up and call her blessed."

The Superb Frame for the Portrait of Mrs. Hayes.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Leader says: "The ladies of the Cincinnati School of Design, or 'my girls,' as Prof. Pitman calls them, with some pride, are busy at work carving the frame for Mrs. Hayes' portrait. The frame, as projected by Prof. Pitman, exhibits much thought and artis tic feeling. Oak has been chosen as the most suitable wood; first, as a symbol of strength, and secondly, because a light wood, such as ash or oak, has a better effect with the dark drapery in the picture than walnut or cherry, which would make the whole too sombre. The outer dimensions of the frame, which is a foot in width, are ten feet by four or five feet. As it is so large and is of solid oak, it will be very massive; but its proportions are such that this will in no wise mar its beauty, but rather be an added charm. The capitals on each side are ornamented with rich, deep cut clusters of grapes. This signifies the restoration of the grape to its highest use, to brighten and gladden men's hearts by its beauty, both in beauty and in art. On the lower part of the left upright is a cluster of annunciation lilies, emblems of purity. Maximilian sunflowers are carved upon the other upright. These sun-flowers have only recently been used for decorative purposes and are becoming great favorites. They are smaller than the common sunflower and are more like an exaggerated daisy. As these flowers ever turn toward the sun seeking the light they represent truth and integrity. In the original design there was, in the centre, at the bot-tom of the frame, a shield bearing the Attorney-at-Law, of Washington, D. C., form erly an examiner in U. S. Patent Office, offers his services as solicitor before the U. S. and Foreign Patent Offices. Careful work at fair prices. Was associated Mr. Jacob Stauffer, of Lancaster, until the latter's death.

*He joined the colony of Roger Williams, came to America, and settled in Cumberland, R. I. There he built a church which is carefully preserved as a relic of the past. It is known as the Elder Ballou meeting house. When it was built there were no saw mills, no nails, and few tools in the country.
