FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 25, 1881.

American Literature and Boston Literature.

St. James' Gazette.

The German professor in Mr. Henry James' last batch of novelettes passes a criticism upon literary Boston which admirably sums up its present curious final phase of complete decadence. He pronounces upon it in the particular embodiment of Mr. Louis Leverett as having reached "the period of culture in which the faculty of appreciation preponderates over the faculty of creation." In this judgment, which its brilliant author carefully places in the mouth of a specially unpleasant character—in order doubtless to blunt the edge of its sting for his fellow citizens in the hub of the universe—Mr. James has put his finger with his usual analytic subtlety on the exact weak point of Boston dilettantism. Quite recently Mr. [illegible]'s brother, Dr. William James, has [illegible] as a metaphysician and psychologist [illegible] all the acuteness, originality, and vigor [illegible] which are hereditary in his father's family, with all the under current of mysticism as well—has pointed out in the Atlantic Monthly that the intellect of Boston is now fast ripening to decay. There are, he says, just as many able and intelligent men in the city as ever; there is just as much culture, just as much literary ferment, just as much philosophical learning; but there is no productiveness. Nothing comes of it all. The elder men are passed away or aged; the young men stand at the mere dead level of cultivated appreciation and receptivity, without ever rising to the higher pitch of active creativeness. Hawthorne and his fellows are gone; Emerson and Longfellow are almost silent; and the new generation is a generation of readers and thinkers only, not of producers and originators. Dr. James does not account for the falling off, or, rather, he accounts for it, more suo, by saying that it is due to the inscrutable action of individuality; which amounts to much the same thing in the end. Yet the question is an interesting one; and it bears a good deal upon a very common English misconception as to the position of Boston in the American world.

In England, people generally imagine that American literature and Boston literature are one and the same thing. Not that many people would consciously assert anything of the sort, because when they hear of an American writer they never think of inquiring whether he is a Bostonian or not; but if they were asked to mention the chief American authors, they would at once mention such names as Longfellow, Hawthorne, Prescott, Motley and Lowell—New Englanders all of them—with perhaps Washington Irving, who was a Bostonesque New Yorker. To the average English mind the Boston litterateurs form the acknowlged specimens of the American author, just as the cultivated New Englander of the old Puritan families is universally figured in England as "the best type of American gentleman." Both are in fact very much what we are accustomed to at home; and both are equally alien to the general tone of thought and feeling in America as a whole.

The truth is, Boston culture has always been an exotic on American soil. It went over to New England with such theological thinkers as the Mathers and Winthrops whose whole feelings and interests were those of an old civilization and a somewhat pedantic style of learning. It lived on and lived down the natural impulses of a new country only by the aid of that stern theocracy which the imported Puritan spirit kept alive in the government of Massachsetts for a hundred and fifty years. As Presbyterianism passed into Unitarianism, it woke up, at the beginning of the present century, into a first flush of literary activity. But Boston had all along been in such close connection with English thought and English culture that this activity was wholly the imitative sort. All that was written there was just an outlaying part of English literature. Longfellow and Prescott are as English as Tennyson and Froude—a great deal more English than Swinburne or Carlyle. Hawthorne has a strong and subtle originality; but it is an originality purely personal, further removed in many points from the ordinary feelings of England. Most of these men find their themes in the Old World, or in that historical and colonial New England which was only a single element of the Old World transplanted, with all its beliefs and prejudices, into the midst of the new. Miles Standish in Puritan Massachusetts, Evangeline in old French Acadia, the Cinque ports, the Rhine castles, the Flemish towns—these are Longfellow's pet themes. "The Scarlet Letter" shows the same turning to the essentially English past in Hawthorne. Many of the English-American writers were European in all their tastes and habits; Washington Irving lived in Spain, and was most at home among the Moorish legends of the Alhambra. Motley took his subject from the Holland where he spent the best years of his life. Hawthorne was American consul at Liverpool. The whole Boston school is from first to last essentially European. Such literatures, based "upon the best models," and without any national root of sentimental of feeling, always die down at last into an era of Claudians. So the Boston movement had died down in its turn into a mere universal diffusion of literary and philosophic taste, mixed with a general disposition to criticise everthing intelligently and to rest satisfied for the most part with negative results. The crude but pregnant suggestiveness of Emerson has naturally given place to a habit of reading Hartman and Schopenhaur, Renan and Herbert Spencer, and deciding that there is a great deal to be said against every point of view. Of the purely objective, critical and analytic standpoint thus produced, Mr. Henry James is himself a singularly favorable outcome.

But behind and beyond this wholly English Bostonian literature there has always been a little surface-seething here and there of a native literature, racy of the soil, which is purely tentative as yet, and mostly very formless, but which truly represents some tendencies at least of the American mind. Of course this underlying and nascent American literature is anything but "cultured;" though sometimes, as in the case of Poe, it makes great pretenses to extraordinary erudition—a common trick of half-educated cleverness. It wholly despises precedent and artistic rules. It is democratic, rude, but truly native. It appeals to the feelings of the ordinary half-taught American mind. Among the New Englanders, Lowell and Hawthorne have, each in different ways, some small touches of the real American spirit, though it is in the West and the Middle states that one sees it most strongly It comes out in Mark Twain on one side, and it struggles through Bret Harte's falsetto pathos on the other. There is more than a tinge of it in Mr. Leland; there is still more in the queer rubbish of the Josh Billings order which somewhat strikes a chord in the American heart wholly wanting in the English vascular system. But it is noticeable above all in the rhapsodies of Walt Whitman, in whose best work one cannot help finding a sort of rough-hewn elementary poetry, without form and void, yet strangely original; while in his worst, one stands aghast at the utter, wordiness and meaninglessness of the man's chaotic concatenations. Now that this protoplasmic school has crept even into Boston and firmly established itself there, one feels that perhaps a real American literature may be actually preparing itself to "begin to be." It is still in the jelly-fish stage of development, no doubt, and somewhat slimy at times; but it is the starting point for a possible fresh evolution—not a mere pretty echo of alien Europe.

Brandy as a Medicine

The following article was voluntarily sent to Mr. H. E. Slaymaker, Agent for Reigart's Old Wine Store, by a prominent practising physician of this county, who has extensively used the Brandy referred to in his regular practice. It is commended to the attention of those afflicted with Indigestion and Dyspepsia.

BRANDY AS A MEDICINE.

This now much abused Alcoholic Stimulant was never intended as a beverage, but to be used as a medicine of great potency in the cure of some of the destructive diseases which sweep away their annual thousands of victims.

With a purely philanthropic motive we present to the favorable notice of invalids—especially those afflicted with that miserable disease Dyspepsia, a specific remedy, which is nothing more or less than Brandy.

The aged, with feeble appetite and more or less debility, will find this simple medicine, when used properly,

A Sovereign Remedy

for all their ills and aches. Be it, however strictly understood that we prescribe and use but one article, and that is

REIGART'S OLD BRANDY,

Sold by our enterprising young friend, H E SLAYMAKER. This Brandy has stood the test for years, and has never failed, as far as our experience extends, and we therefore give it the preference over all other Brandies no matter with how many law-breaking French titles they are branded. One-fourth of the money that is yearly thrown away on various impotent dyspepsia specifics would suffice to buy all the Brandy to cure any such case or cases. In proof of the curative powers of

Reigart's Old Brandy,

In cases of Dyspepsia, we can summon numbers of witnesses—one case in particular we cite:—

A hard-working farmer had been afflicted with an exhaustive Dyspepsia for a number of years; his stomach would reject almost every kind of food; he had sour eructations constantly—no appetite—in fact, he was obliged to restrict his diet to crackers and stale bread, and as a beverage he used McGrann's Root Beer. He is a Methodist, and then, as now, preached at times, and in his discourses often declaimed earnestly against all kinds of strong drink. When advised to try

Reigart's Old Brandy,

In his case, he looked up with astonishment, but after hearing of its wonderful effects in the cases of some of his near acquaintances, he at last consented to follow our advice. He used the Brandy faithfully and steadily; the first bottle giving him an appetite, and before the second was taken he was a sound man, with a stomach capable of digesting anything which he chose to eat. He still keeps it and uses a little occasionally; and since he has this medicine he has been of very little pecuniary benefit to the doctor.—A PRACTISING PHYSICIAN.
