

The Lancaster Intelligencer.

Volume XVII—No. 193.

LANCASTER, PA., FRIDAY, APRIL 15, 1881.

Price Two Cents.

CLOTHING.

REMOVAL

John Falck's

Tailoring and Gents' Furnishing Establishment,

From 41, opposite to,

44 WEST KING STREET,

To the room occupied for many years by the Lancaster Fire Insurance Company.

TEMPORARY REMOVAL

AL. ROSENSTEIN'S

CLOTHING STORE!

Having removed to

No. 148 North Queen Street,

Two doors below my old stand, and right next door to Fitts & Wilson, where I propose to clear out my entire stock of

Ready-Made Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods, and Hats and Caps

BELOW COST,

The stock must be closed out before

MAY 1st, 1881,

when I will remove to the Elegant and Spacious Store Room,

No. 37 North Queen St.,

Which is now being remodelled.

PRICE LIST:

CHILDREN'S SUITS from $1.25 up

SCHOOL SUITS from $2.00 up

BOYS' SUITS from $2.75 up

YOUTH'S SUITS from $3.50 up

MEN'S SUITS from $3.75 up

REMEMBER MY

Merchant Tailoring Department

is being stocked with New Goods every day.

I employ none but First-Class Cutters and Tailors, and use the Best Trimmings the market affords.

I make suits to order for $10, $12, $14, $16, $18, $20 and upwards.

A Perfect Fit Always Guaranteed.

Call and examine my Stock and be convinced of the truth of the above.

AL. ROSENSTEIN,

148 North Queen Street.

SIGN OF THE RED FRONT.

mar11-14

NEW STOCK OF CLOTHING

—708—

SPRING 1881,

—47—

D. B. Hostetter & Son's,

No. 24 CENTRE SQUARE.

Having made unusual efforts to bring before the public a fine, stylish and well made stock of

READY-MADE CLOTHING,

we are now prepared to show them one of the most carefully selected stocks of clothing in this city, at the Lowest Cash Prices.

MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S

CLOTHING!

IN GREAT VARIETY.

Piece Goods of the Most Stylish Designs and at prices within the reach of all.

Give us a call.

D. B. Hostetter & Son,

24 CENTRE SQUARE,

LANCASTER, PA.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.

COMMON SENSE STEW PAN,

FAR SUPERIOR TO ANY COOKING UTENSIL IN USE.

They will not Burn or Scorch like an IRON or TIN Kettle.

The Best, Cheapest and Most Satisfactory.

HIGH & MARTIN,

15 EAST KING STREET.

CLOTHING.

BUSINESS SUITS.

BUSINESS SUITS.

We have somewhere in the region of one hundred styles of business suits now ready to put on. A list of them would be the dulllest of reading; and yet we want you to know substantially what they are like.

The lowest price is $8.50, and the highest is $90. They are all of wool. $8.50 is very little to get all-wool cloths, sponging, cutting, trimming, making, watching, handling, rent, book-keeping, advertising and selling, out of; but we manage to do it by dividing the costs among so many of you that one hardly feels his share at all; he pays for materials and work, and very little more.

We'll take another day for the rest; but you may as well come and see now as later. Seeing is better than reading.

WANAMAKER & BROWN,

OAK HALL, MARKET AND SIXTH,

PHILADELPHIA.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING HOUSE IN AMERICA.

1881. SPRING OPENING.

SPRING OPENING AT

MYERS & RATHFON'S.

We are prepared to show the public the largest and the greatest variety of PIECE GOODS ever offered in the city of Lancaster. Goods suitable for the plainest as well as the most fastidious, and from the lowest grades to the very finest in textures, all of which we are prepared to make up to order at the most reasonable price and at the shortest notice and in the best workmanlike manner. Our stocks of

READY-MADE CLOTHING

are full and complete; they have been gotten up with great care; they are well made and well trimmed. The goods are all sprung and will be sold at BOTTOM PRICES. Call and examine our stock before you make your spring purchase, and you will save money by purchasing your CLOTHING of

MYERS & RATHFON,

POPULAR TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS,

No. 12 EAST KING STREET, LANCASTER, PENNA.

SLATE ROOFING.

Wrought Iron Pipe, Brass Cocks, of all kinds

HEATERS AND RANGES,

GAS FIXTURES, SLATE ROOFING, TIN PLATE.

Nos. 11 & 13 EAST ORANGE STREET, LANCASTER, PA.

JOHN L. ARNOLD.

Iron Bitters.

IRON BITTERS!

A TRUE TONIC. SURE APPETISER.

IRON BITTERS are highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic; especially

INDIGESTION, DYSPEPSIA, INTERMITTENT FEVERS, WANT OF APETITE, LOSS OF STRENGTH, LACK OF ENERGY, &c.

It enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. It acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as Tearing the Stomach, Head in the Stomach, Heartburn, &c. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth or give headache. Sold by all druggists. Write for the A. B. C. Book, 32 pp. of useful and amusing reading—sent free.

BROWN CHEMICAL COMPANY,

BALTIMORE, MD.

For Sale at COCHRAN'S DRUG STORE, 137 and 139 North Queen Street, Lancaster.

LIVERY STABLE.

REMOVED.

HOUGHTON'S

LIVERY, SALE AND EXCHANGE STABLES

HAVE BEEN REMOVED TO

No. 221 NORTH QUEEN STREET,

(Zeche's Old Livery Stand), where parties can find First-Class

Single and Double Teams, Safe Horses, New Buggies and Harness.

Also will have a New Line of Omnibuses for Sunday School and Private Parties for this Season. Special attention given to Moving. Also Railroad calls for passengers and baggage attended to.

LIVERY OFFICE: 221 NORTH QUEEN STREET.

Second-Hand Buggies for sale: have been run but a short time.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

NEW BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

THE NEW ONE PRICE

BOOT AND SHOE STORE,

No. 30 EAST KING STREET.

I have a large and fine selection of Ladies' Gents', Misses' and Children's

BOOTS, SHOES AND RUBBERS

In great variety, from the lowest grades to the very finest Goods and the Latest Styles in the market.

Don't fail to call and examine my goods and satisfy yourself before purchasing elsewhere.

All goods to be as represented or money refunded.

D. P. STACKHOUSE,

LANCASTER, PA.

Lancaster Intelligencer.

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 15, 1881.

James R. Amos's Memorial.

A Sketch of Lincoln University for Colored Men.

W. U. Hensel in N. Y. Independent.

Thomas Clarkson, the English philanthropist, agitator and abolitionist, while on a horseback journey from Cambridge to London, in 1785, rested by the roadside; and, while engaged in meditation, he resolved to devote the remainder of his life to effecting the abolition of slavery. The spot where he made this high resolution was recently made memorable by the erection of an obelisk, which bears an inscription with the record of that resolve. The memorial was set up by Mr. Arthur Giles Potter, and unveiled in the presence of a large company.

Nearly three centuries later, in the empty of Chester, state of Pennsylvania, not far from that famous Mason and Dixon line, across which the fugitive slaves so often found friends and refuge, James R. Amos, a free negro, a day laborer, inspired with the ambition of educating himself and perhaps casting a glimpse of the future lighting up of the "dark continent," made a weekly journey on foot of some six or seven miles, to receive instruction from the late Rev. John Miller Dickey, D. D., a Presbyterian divine of influence and energy. He was midway on the road over which he traveled, as a stone, at which he knelt and prayed, on every trip, that he might be enabled to continue his studies and become the means of doing good to his race in this country and in Africa.

In 1854, largely moved by the example of this man's aspirations, the Presbytery of Newcastle founded a school, called Ashmun Institute, for the education of colored missionaries to labor among their people in Africa. The building was erected near the spot where James R. Amos had lifted up his voice to God in supplication for His aid to his race; and the very stone which marked the spot of his devotions was taken up into the front wall of Ashmun Institute. The polished tablet inscribed, "The Night is Far Spent, the Day is at Hand," bore what was a bold prophecy in the days of his college life, put into the interior of University Hall, Lincoln University, which has become the successor of Ashmun Institute, and from that chapel walls these prophetic words now beam upon the representatives of Amos's race, as they gathered there at twilight into the sanctuary.

One day last summer I stood upon the spot made memorable by that black man's devotion—his prayers, his faith, his prophecy; and the recollection of them thrilled me, as I looked upon a university erected there for the education of his race, whose course was so strangely altered since that time. I listened to the exercises of a commencement there, which, held in the midst of a rural population, was attended by fully 1,500 persons, two-thirds of them colored. The seven graduates did as much credit to themselves and their institution as the average classmen of 1880 at any Pennsylvania college. From that free platform Presbyterian divines, the president of a Baptist theological seminary, the chief of the faculty of a Virginia college, a Democratic editor, and an intelligent colored man, once a leading manager of the underground railway in Pennsylvania, chorused their voices in praise of the institution, its mission and the manner in which it was performing it.

Amyel P. Hensel, minister in Liberia, in 1839, Ashmun Institute existing from 1854 to 1866, barely surviving local prejudice and lack of popular interest in the education of the negro, until in the latter mentioned year Lincoln University was founded. One of its chief promoters was the Rev. Dr. Dickey and his wife was its liberal and devoted patroness. It comprises a collegiate department for the general education and self-education of colored boys and men, and a theological school.

The latter was taken under the care of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, in 1871, in conformity with the general plan adopted for the supervision of theological seminaries.

I have before me, as I write, a printed sheet of the names of those who have gone forth from its departments of arts and theology, with their respective engagements; and I venture the assertion that no institution of learning in the country can present a more eloquent record of philanthropic work, nor as high an average of useful activity on the part of those who have gone from between its walls. Of 407 young men, who have received a greater or lesser degree, shared the advantages of its preparatory and lower class, many are engaged as teachers throughout the South; while of 133 graduated from the collegiate department, after from four to six years' instruction, 109 are engaged in professional and educational life, indeed, all professional labor by colored men is not "educational" labor in the southern states. Eighty-three ex-students of Lincoln are ordained ministers of the gospel. The almost universal aim of those prosecuting their studies is to engage in opening the blessings of education or in carrying the tidings of the gospel to their own race, in the South or in Africa. The widening waves of influence which started at this center have very sensibly washed the shores of Africa. If the efficiency of the university is to be measured by the testimonials which have come back from every place where its graduates have been tested, there can be but one conclusion regarding the system of Negro education on trial here. That system has for one of its characteristics an extension only of such aid to the student as his necessities warrant and to such extent as he gives promise of making his education effective. With the resources at their command, the professors, who seem to combine a rare degree of business sagacity with accomplishments in the exercise of sound discretion in each individual case as to the amount of aid to be extended. Several professorships are fully endowed, some partially, and the expenses of others are met by current contributions. The college property includes a number of halls, used for class rooms and dormitories, each hall, respectively, for the students all board on the club system; but whether the student shall be supported in full or in part only, to what extent and how long such support shall be continued, or when withdrawn are questions for the exercise of sound discretion by the management, and thus far that discretion seems to have been exercised with great practical wisdom. The circumstances of the student and the promise of his usefulness are duly weighed and that course is adopted with regard to each individual which shall, while it preserves for him the best discipline of self-reliance, also afford the largest return, in view of the general objects of the institution. Besides its building and grounds, the university now has four endowed professorships (soon to be increased by another) and the interest of about $13,530 contributed for scholarships. Its present operations require the support of two other professors. The estimated expenses of a student for a year in the collegiate department are: tuition, $25; fuel, furniture, and library, $30; board and washing, $96.50; total, $151.50. In the seminary they are reduced to a total of $81 per year. Occasionally a student comes for admission whose accumulated savings are sufficient to enable him to finish his education. Frequently they start with little capital, and by the exercise of industry and thrift in a horseback journey from Cambridge to London, in 1785, rested by the roadside; and, while engaged in meditation, he resolved to devote the remainder of his life to effecting the abolition of slavery. The spot where he made this high resolution was recently made memorable by the erection of an obelisk, which bears an inscription with the record of that resolve. The memorial was set up by Mr. Arthur Giles Potter, and unveiled in the presence of a large company.

Nearly three centuries later, in the empty of Chester, state of Pennsylvania, not far from that famous Mason and Dixon line, across which the fugitive slaves so often found friends and refuge, James R. Amos, a free negro, a day laborer, inspired with the ambition of educating himself and perhaps casting a glimpse of the future lighting up of the "dark continent," made a weekly journey on foot of some six or seven miles, to receive instruction from the late Rev. John Miller Dickey, D. D., a Presbyterian divine of influence and energy. He was midway on the road over which he traveled, as a stone, at which he knelt and prayed, on every trip, that he might be enabled to continue his studies and become the means of doing good to his race in this country and in Africa.

In 1854, largely moved by the example of this man's aspirations, the Presbytery of Newcastle founded a school, called Ashmun Institute, for the education of colored missionaries to labor among their people in Africa. The building was erected near the spot where James R. Amos had lifted up his voice to God in supplication for His aid to his race; and the very stone which marked the spot of his devotions was taken up into the front wall of Ashmun Institute. The polished tablet inscribed, "The Night is Far Spent, the Day is at Hand," bore what was a bold prophecy in the days of his college life, put into the interior of University Hall, Lincoln University, which has become the successor of Ashmun Institute, and from that chapel walls these prophetic words now beam upon the representatives of Amos's race, as they gathered there at twilight into the sanctuary.

One day last summer I stood upon the spot made memorable by that black man's devotion—his prayers, his faith, his prophecy; and the recollection of them thrilled me, as I looked upon a university erected there for the education of his race, whose course was so strangely altered since that time. I listened to the exercises of a commencement there, which, held in the midst of a rural population, was attended by fully 1,500 persons, two-thirds of them colored. The seven graduates did as much credit to themselves and their institution as the average classmen of 1880 at any Pennsylvania college. From that free platform Presbyterian divines, the president of a Baptist theological seminary, the chief of the faculty of a Virginia college, a Democratic editor, and an intelligent colored man, once a leading manager of the underground railway in Pennsylvania, chorused their voices in praise of the institution, its mission and the manner in which it was performing it.

Amyel P. Hensel, minister in Liberia, in 1839, Ashmun Institute existing from 1854 to 1866, barely surviving local prejudice and lack of popular interest in the education of the negro, until in the latter mentioned year Lincoln University was founded. One of its chief promoters was the Rev. Dr. Dickey and his wife was its liberal and devoted patroness. It comprises a collegiate department for the general education and self-education of colored boys and men, and a theological school.

The latter was taken under the care of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, in 1871, in conformity with the general plan adopted for the supervision of theological seminaries.

I have before me, as I write, a printed sheet of the names of those who have gone forth from its departments of arts and theology, with their respective engagements; and I venture the assertion that no institution of learning in the country can present a more eloquent record of philanthropic work, nor as high an average of useful activity on the part of those who have gone from between its walls. Of 407 young men, who have received a greater or lesser degree, shared the advantages of its preparatory and lower class, many are engaged as teachers throughout the South; while of 133 graduated from the collegiate department, after from four to six years' instruction, 109 are engaged in professional and educational life, indeed, all professional labor by colored men is not "educational" labor in the southern states. Eighty-three ex-students of Lincoln are ordained ministers of the gospel. The almost universal aim of those prosecuting their studies is to engage in opening the blessings of education or in carrying the tidings of the gospel to their own race, in the South or in Africa. The widening waves of influence which started at this center have very sensibly washed the shores of Africa. If the efficiency of the university is to be measured by the testimonials which have come back from every place where its graduates have been tested, there can be but one conclusion regarding the system of Negro education on trial here. That system has for one of its characteristics an extension only of such aid to the student as his necessities warrant and to such extent as he gives promise of making his education effective. With the resources at their command, the professors, who seem to combine a rare degree of business sagacity with accomplishments in the exercise of sound discretion in each individual case as to the amount of aid to be extended. Several professorships are fully endowed, some partially, and the expenses of others are met by current contributions. The college property includes a number of halls, used for class rooms and dormitories, each hall, respectively, for the students all board on the club system; but whether the student shall be supported in full or in part only, to what extent and how long such support shall be continued, or when withdrawn are questions for the exercise of sound discretion by the management, and thus far that discretion seems to have been exercised with great practical wisdom. The circumstances of the student and the promise of his usefulness are duly weighed and that course is adopted with regard to each individual which shall, while it preserves for him the best discipline of self-reliance, also afford the largest return, in view of the general objects of the institution. Besides its building and grounds, the university now has four endowed professorships (soon to be increased by another) and the interest of about $13,530 contributed for scholarships. Its present operations require the support of two other professors. The estimated expenses of a student for a year in the collegiate department are: tuition, $25; fuel, furniture, and library, $30; board and washing, $96.50; total, $151.50. In the seminary they are reduced to a total of $81 per year. Occasionally a student comes for admission whose accumulated savings are sufficient to enable him to finish his education. Frequently they start with little capital, and by the exercise of industry and thrift in a horseback journey from Cambridge to London, in 1785, rested by the roadside; and, while engaged in meditation, he resolved to devote the remainder of his life to effecting the abolition of slavery. The spot where he made this high resolution was recently made memorable by the erection of an obelisk, which bears an inscription with the record of that resolve. The memorial was set up by Mr. Arthur Giles Potter, and unveiled in the presence of a large company.

Nearly three centuries later, in the empty of Chester, state of Pennsylvania, not far from that famous Mason and Dixon line, across which the fugitive slaves so often found friends and refuge, James R. Amos, a free negro, a day laborer, inspired with the ambition of educating himself and perhaps casting a glimpse of the future lighting up of the "dark continent," made a weekly journey on foot of some six or seven miles, to receive instruction from the late Rev. John Miller Dickey, D. D., a Presbyterian divine of influence and energy. He was midway on the road over which he traveled, as a stone, at which he knelt and prayed, on every trip, that he might be enabled to continue his studies and become the means of doing good to his race in this country and in Africa.

In 1854, largely moved by the example of this man's aspirations, the Presbytery of Newcastle founded a school, called Ashmun Institute, for the education of colored missionaries to labor among their people in Africa. The building was erected near the spot where James R. Amos had lifted up his voice to God in supplication for His aid to his race; and the very stone which marked the spot of his devotions was taken up into the front wall of Ashmun Institute. The polished tablet inscribed, "The Night is Far Spent, the Day is at Hand," bore what was a bold prophecy in the days of his college life, put into the interior of University Hall, Lincoln University, which has become the successor of Ashmun Institute, and from that chapel walls these prophetic words now beam upon the representatives of Amos's race, as they gathered there at twilight into the sanctuary.

One day last summer I stood upon the spot made memorable by that black man's devotion—his prayers, his faith, his prophecy; and the recollection of them thrilled me, as I looked upon a university erected there for the education of his race, whose course was so strangely altered since that time. I listened to the exercises of a commencement there, which, held in the midst of a rural population, was attended by fully 1,500 persons, two-thirds of them colored. The seven graduates did as much credit to themselves and their institution as the average classmen of 1880 at any Pennsylvania college. From that free platform Presbyterian divines, the president of a Baptist theological seminary, the chief of the faculty of a Virginia college, a Democratic editor, and an intelligent colored man, once a leading manager of the underground railway in Pennsylvania, chorused their voices in praise of the institution, its mission and the manner in which it was performing it.

Amyel P. Hensel, minister in Liberia, in 1839, Ashmun Institute existing from 1854 to 1866, barely surviving local prejudice and lack of popular interest in the education of the negro, until in the latter mentioned year Lincoln University was founded. One of its chief promoters was the Rev. Dr. Dickey and his wife was its liberal and devoted patroness. It comprises a collegiate department for the general education and self-education of colored boys and men, and a theological school.

The latter was taken under the care of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, in 1871, in conformity with the general plan adopted for the supervision of theological seminaries.

I have before me, as I write, a printed sheet of the names of those who have gone forth from its departments of arts and theology, with their respective engagements; and I venture the assertion that no institution of learning in the country can present a more eloquent record of philanthropic work, nor as high an average of useful activity on the part of those who have gone from between its walls. Of 407 young men, who have received a greater or lesser degree, shared the advantages of its preparatory and lower class, many are engaged as teachers throughout the South; while of 133 graduated from the collegiate department, after from four to six years' instruction, 109 are engaged in professional and educational life, indeed, all professional labor by colored men is not "educational" labor in the southern states. Eighty-three ex-students of Lincoln are ordained ministers of the gospel. The almost universal aim of those prosecuting their studies is to engage in opening the blessings of education or in carrying the tidings of the gospel to their own race, in the South or in Africa. The widening waves of influence which started at this center have very sensibly washed the shores of Africa. If the efficiency of the university is to be measured by the testimonials which have come back from every place where its graduates have been tested, there can be but one conclusion regarding the system of Negro education on trial here. That system has for one of its characteristics an extension only of such aid to the student as his necessities warrant and to such extent as he gives promise of making his education effective. With the resources at their command, the professors, who seem to combine a rare degree of business sagacity with accomplishments in the exercise of sound discretion in each individual case as to the amount of aid to be extended. Several professorships are fully endowed, some partially, and the expenses of others are met by current contributions. The college property includes a number of halls, used for class rooms and dormitories, each hall, respectively, for the students all board on the club system; but whether the student shall be supported in full or in part only, to what extent and how long such support shall be continued, or when withdrawn are questions for the exercise of sound discretion by the management, and thus far that discretion seems to have been exercised with great practical wisdom. The circumstances of the student and the promise of his usefulness are duly weighed and that course is adopted with regard to each individual which shall, while it preserves for him the best discipline of self-reliance, also afford the largest return, in view of the general objects of the institution. Besides its building and grounds, the university now has four endowed professorships (soon to be increased by another) and the interest of about $13,530 contributed for scholarships. Its present operations require the support of two other professors. The estimated expenses of a student for a year in the collegiate department are: tuition, $25; fuel, furniture, and library, $30; board and washing, $96.50; total, $151.50. In the seminary they are reduced to a total of $81 per year. Occasionally a student comes for admission whose accumulated savings are sufficient to enable him to finish his education. Frequently they start with little capital, and by the exercise of industry and thrift in a horseback journey from Cambridge to London, in 1785, rested by the roadside; and, while engaged in meditation, he resolved to devote the remainder of his life to effecting the abolition of slavery. The spot where he made this high resolution was recently made memorable by the erection of an obelisk, which bears an inscription with the record of that resolve. The memorial was set up by Mr. Arthur Giles Potter, and unveiled in the presence of a large company.

Nearly three centuries later, in the empty of Chester, state of Pennsylvania, not far from that famous Mason and Dixon line, across which the fugitive slaves so often found friends and refuge, James R. Amos, a free negro, a day laborer, inspired with the ambition of educating himself and perhaps casting a glimpse of the future lighting up of the "dark continent," made a weekly journey on foot of some six or seven miles, to receive instruction from the late Rev. John Miller Dickey, D. D., a Presbyterian divine of influence and energy. He was midway on the road over which he traveled, as a stone, at which he knelt and prayed, on every trip, that he might be enabled to continue his studies and become the means of doing good to his race in this country and in Africa.

In 1854, largely moved by the example of this man's aspirations, the Presbytery of Newcastle founded a school, called Ashmun Institute, for the education of colored missionaries to labor among their people in Africa. The building was erected near the spot where James R. Amos had lifted up his voice to God in supplication for His aid to his race; and the very stone which marked the spot of his devotions was taken up into the front wall of Ashmun Institute. The polished tablet inscribed, "The Night is Far Spent, the Day is at Hand," bore what was a bold prophecy in the days of his college life, put into the interior of University Hall, Lincoln University, which has become the successor of Ashmun Institute, and from that chapel walls these prophetic words now beam upon the representatives of Amos's race, as they gathered there at twilight into the sanctuary.

One day last summer I stood upon the spot made memorable by that black man's devotion—his prayers, his faith, his prophecy; and the recollection of them thrilled me, as I looked upon a university erected there for the education of his race, whose course was so strangely altered since that time. I listened to the exercises of a commencement there, which, held in the midst of a rural population, was attended by fully 1,500 persons, two-thirds of them colored. The seven graduates did as much credit to themselves and their institution as the average classmen of 1880 at any Pennsylvania college. From that free platform Presbyterian divines, the president of a Baptist theological seminary, the chief of the faculty of a Virginia college, a Democratic editor, and an intelligent colored man, once a leading manager of the underground railway in Pennsylvania, chorused their voices in praise of the institution, its mission and the manner in which it was performing it.

Amyel P. Hensel, minister in Liberia, in 1839, Ashmun Institute existing from 1854 to 1866, barely surviving local prejudice and lack of popular interest in the education of the negro, until in the latter mentioned year Lincoln University was founded. One of its chief promoters was the Rev. Dr. Dickey and his wife was its liberal and devoted patroness. It comprises a collegiate department for the general education and self-education of colored boys and men, and a theological school.

The latter was taken under the care of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, in 1871, in conformity with the general plan adopted for the supervision of theological seminaries.

I have before me, as I write, a printed sheet of the names of those who have gone forth from its departments of arts and theology, with their respective engagements; and I venture the assertion that no institution of learning in the country can present a more eloquent record of philanthropic work, nor as high an average of useful activity on the part of those who have gone from between its walls. Of 407 young men, who have received a greater or lesser degree, shared the advantages of its preparatory and lower class, many are engaged as teachers throughout the South; while of 133 graduated from the collegiate department, after from four to six years' instruction, 109 are engaged in professional and educational life, indeed, all professional labor by colored men is not "educational" labor in the southern states. Eighty-three ex-students of Lincoln are ordained ministers of the gospel. The almost universal aim of those prosecuting their studies is to engage in opening the blessings of education or in carrying the tidings of the gospel to their own race, in the South or in Africa. The widening waves of influence which started at this center have very sensibly washed the shores of Africa. If the efficiency of the university is to be measured by the testimonials which have come back from every place where its graduates have been tested, there can be but one conclusion regarding the system of Negro education on trial here. That system has for one of its characteristics an extension only of such aid to the student as his necessities warrant and to such extent as he gives promise of making his education effective. With the resources at their command, the professors, who seem to combine a rare degree of business sagacity with accomplishments in the exercise