Rambles at the Home of Barbara Fritchie.

BY REV. A. J. WEDDELL, Norristown Register.

Among the ballads of the war, none perhaps are more widely known than Whittier's "Barbara Fritchie."

It is a simple story, told in a plain way, but its deep pathos, its glowing patriotism, and generous sentiments towards a fallen foe, have made it universally popular.

Whittier has conferred poetic immortality upon the old town of Frederick, and made the home of Barbara Fritchie, whether really or a myth, a pilgrim's shrine of patriotism for future generations.

His description of the scene of his story is so graphic and true to nature, that strangers cannot fail to recognize it.

Feeling the need of rest and recreation, I left Norristown to spend a few days among friends and relatives in Maryland, and to revisit the scenes of my childhood and early life in Frederick and adjoining country.

Passing a day in Gettysburg, I took the train for Frederick, and arrived, after a slow and tedious ride, at the sun of a sultry summer afternoon, was sinking behind the low mountain range of the Catoctin.

Frederick, now a city, is located in the richest part of Maryland, sometimes called the "garden spot," and is one of the old colonial towns.

During the French and Indian war it was one of the outposts of civilization, and in the time of the Revolution, had barracks, still standing a few years ago, in which were quartered many of the prisoners taken at Yorktown and other places.

I received the statement is a man of high standing and veracity, and was well acquainted with Barbara Fritchie and Mrs. Quantrell, there can be no reason to doubt his version of the affair.

But, whoever was the heroine of that daring patriotic act, the honor with posterity will rest upon the heroic heart of Barbara Fritchie; and generations to come will still read the legend as Whittier wrote it:

On that pleasant morn of the early fall When Lee marched down the mountain wall, Over the mountains winding down the hill, Horse and foot into Fredericktown.

Forty flags with their crimson bars, Forty flags with their crimson bars, Flapped in the morning wind; the sun of noon looked down, and saw not one.

Up rose old Barbara Fritchie then, Bowed with her fourscore years and ten; Bravest of all in Frederick town, She stood with her flag on hand and pen.

In her attic window the staff she set, To show the one heart was loyal yet, Barbara Fritchie had long since gone to her grave. We cannot but honor the patriotic devotion of the wondrous, stern old woman of ninety to her country's flag.

But, had the poet known, or taken for his subject the real heroine of his story, the aptly accomplished matron of forty, surrounded by her children, he would have made a more attractive picture, and given us a beautiful living impregnation of the Goddess of Liberty seated amid the storm clouds of war, and waving the starry symbol of union and freedom, order and law.
