Grave of William Penn.

Visit to the Penn Churchyard. ondon Dispatch to the New York Merald. A report having been spread that the bones of the founder of Pennsylvania were to be transferred from their resting place in Buckinghamshire to America, I determined to make a pilgrimage to Jordan's meeting house churchyard. I chose June 2 for the visit, and duly made my way to Rickmanworth, a quaint little town in Herfortshire and thence to Chalfont by confusing and winding roads. Chalfont is in the heart of Buckinghamshire. It is several miles from the railroad station and off the high road. Yet it is historic ground. Near by, in Chalfont St. Giles, is shown the house where Milton spent some of his latter years and composed much of his poetry and where Ell-wood, the Quaker, suggested to him the writing of "Paradise Re-gained." The little burial ground of the Friends, in which Penn is buried, is about three miles beyond Chalfont St. Giles. The road is very solitary, but very pleasant at this time of the year, when the thorn and chestnut are in full bloom and the fields are waving with young corn. After topping a slight elevation I was surprised by a sight quite out of keeping with the prevailing solitude. I was looking down upon a thickly wooded hollow where two paths joined, and saw a score or two of people, both men and women, passing to and fro. A glance assured me that most of them were Friends and that this must undoubtedly be the place which I sought, some extraordinary occasion having brought a crowd together. A short walk brought me within view of a humble building ensconced amid a grove of magnificent trees, which were doubly sacred to the Friends as having served their co-religionists as a worshiping place for gen-erations, and as being the chosen resting place of William Penn. No mouldering ruin or rich sculptured tracery attracts the gaze. Not a single object of artistic beauty, not one form of earthly grandeur, meets the view. It is a barn-like structure. In front of it are a few unpretending gravestones and that is all. One might almost fancy it the cemetery of some ruined and deserted hamlet but for the people that were there assembled. I found that I had hit upon the rare occasion of an annual meeting of the Friends of the district. It is almost the only meeting held here during the whole course of the year, and the very matter which took me there had brought a larger concourse of Friends. All had heard or had talked of the removal of William Penn's bones. Although none believed that it could be, all wanted to hear what was said on the subject.

Among the number were some American Friends who were on their travels and who had devoted the day to seeing a spot which was so endeared to them. Among them were Dr. King, of Baltimore; Mr. J. C. Thorn, of Baltimore; Mr. Amos Hains, of New York, and nearly a dozen others. I found a group of gentlemen gathered about one of the unpretending graves—or gravestones, I should say, for there was hardly a mound to indicate where a body had been laid. It bore the simple inscription, "William Peun, 1718." A few years ago a stranger would have been unable to distinguish the grave of William Penn from the surrounding grass covered hillocks. No sign declared the former rank and character of the sleeper. Wild flowers grew alike over all

It was Granville Penn, of Stoke Pogis, the great-grandson of William Penn, who suggested the erection of a small stone to mark the resting place of his ancestor. This advice was adopted. Headstones mark not only the grave of Penn, but those of his two wives, his children, his relatives, his intimate associates and his fellow-laborers. The greater number of graves remain unmarked by stones. Only fifteen stones are found in all, three being close to the grave of William Penn, Near the entrance gate, to the left of the nar-row path, a slab points out the graves of his five childeren. On the right of the path is a row of graves, five marked by headstones. The second and third are those of Isaac Pennington and his wife; the foarth is that of Penn's first wife, Gulielma Maria ; the fifth bears the name of William Penn and his second wife. To molest any of those graves; to molest, most of all, the chief among them, that of William Penn, would be a desecration. Such was the opinion of all with whom I spoke—Americans as well as English. They would not like to see the graves touched on any account. Nowhere could Penn's remains rest so suitably as beneath the elms of the quiet spot where, with others, he had worshiped in unquiet and dangerous times and where at his own request he was buried. This opinion found unanimous expression in a resolution which was passed at the meeting to the effect that nothing would ever induce the trustees of the little graveyard to allow any of the graves to be molested. They had heard that a sum of money had been collected to purchase a grave for Penn's bones, but they smiled at the simplicity of any one who could upon them. For anything which they intended to do or which they could be induced to do in the matter the remains would stay were they are forever. Minof Newport Pagnell, Mr. Tuke Hitching Times the following letter: "The intimation in your correspondence from the United States, relative to the removal of the body of William Penn from its resting place at Jordans, Buckinghamshire, to America, takes me by surprise. Blonde Hair Changed to Black

In May the color was nearly a pure black, which it still retains, although there is a slightly apparent tendency to return again to a lighter color. Frauds and Washington. The Steals in the Departments. legular Correspondence Philadelphia Times What would you say if they should find that valuable desks had been sold to private parties without advertising for from 25 cents to $1; that ice pitchers disappear by the dozens; that chandeliers are changed every year or two; that carpets costing $5 a yard are put down where they are not needed, kept down for a short time and then ripped up, carted off and sold for almost nothing and others put down in their places, and other things equally eccentric? I dare not say that these car-pets are suspected to be bought by somebody who makes a good deal of money on them, and I cannot say that percentages are paid for new carpets. This stealing from the government is not confined to star routes, let me tell you, and the way some officers' houses are furnished and the way some officers live on small salaries would astonish a Philadelphia marine. Drop-lights, desks, book cases, clocks, chairs, books, paper-weights, scissors, knives, fine stationery—these things go literally by the hun-dreds, not only in the departments but in the capitol, the courts and all branches of the government service. I have never been a government officer, but still I know how how it's done. Here is Tommy Jones. He is a member of Congress and the chairman of a committee. He tells his messenger or his clerk to have "that desk" sent to his house; he has so much writing to do at night that he must have it. Do you think that desk gets back to the capitol when that man leaves the capitol? Not much. Then Dick Roe is a chief clerk somewhere. A handsome drop-light worth $20 or $30, perhaps, is in his office. He says to his messenger: 'Henry, take the drop-light to my house. I have got to use it for a week or two and then you can fetch it back.' Does it ever get back, though? Hardly Thea a congressman may have in his committee room a hundred dollar clock. At the close of the session he orders the clock to be be sent to his house, "for fear that somebody may steal it during the recess." Does that clock ever tick in that commit tee room again? Not a tick. Another way. Jack Doe is the head of a department. He commands unlimited servants, called messengers. He tells a handsome colored man to go to his house and stay for a day or two until he can find a servant. Do you suppose that officer ever really finds a suitable man? Never. There is a cabinet-maker (I mean a fellow who makes pretty wardrobes, book cases, desks, chairs, etc., out of mahogany, rosewood, etc.), in nearly every department. How easy it is for the cabinet-member to tell the cabinetmaker that he wants a certain thing made. "Won't you please do it (I can't find anybody else who can suit me) and keep the account and I will pay for the lumber, for your time, etc." Does that cabinet officer ever get an account? No. sir. The carriage evil, since the days of the famous landaulet which stopped the way of Judge Williams to the chief justiceship, is a good deal abated. It used to be that every chief clerk and bureau officer had a coupe, which their families used while the officer rode in the street cars. Every department has a carriage or two now, but it is not noticed to any great degree. Now, even that high old body—the supreme court even its members have some pleasant priv ileges. A room in the residence of each one of the nine judges is furnished by the government-a handsome carpet, leather furniture, a beautiful desk, immense book cases and a law library, with such other little adornments, including a servant, as may seem necessary. No one, hower, will object to this. It is as proper to supply the judges with a library and an office as it is to supply them with a judicial desk or stationery.

A New Temperance Movement.

iew York Sun. The temperance movement which has lately been started in the Episcopal church is one of the most important and suppose that money could have any effect significant over undertaken in the United States. It is not to be a total abstinence agitation, for a large part of those who are engaged in it are probably moderate drinkers themselves. Neither does it proutes to this effect were entered upon the record of the day's proceedings and a committee was appointed to see that nothing was done contrary to this formers of the past. It is simply designed resolution should any direct application be made for the removal of Penu's church influences against the danger of body. Up to the present this has not been the case. It should be said that these views are in accordance with the wish of Colonel Stuart, whose wife is a descendant of the founder of Pennsylvania and who of the founder of Pennsylvania and who still enjoys the pension of £4,000 which was granted to the family in lieu of the money lent by William Penn to Charles II. Among those elected upon this committee for the safeguard of the grave may be mentioned the names of Mr. R. Littleboy, of Newport Pagnell, Mr. Tuke Hitching ance society composed of individuals who and Mr. Browntown, counselor of Liston, larce society composed of individuals who The first named is the chief trustee of have bound themselves to live according to Jordan's meeting house.
