MILLERSYILLE

SOME POINTED QUESTIONS.

rress Comments on the School Troubles

A Lot of Interrogations.

To the Editors of the INTELLIGENCER: Permit me to ask a few questions of various parties concerned in the Millersville trouble, correct answers to which will throw much light on the whole matte. Let me first interrogate the authorities as follows :

1. Why do you attempt to create the impression that the "rebels," as you call them, are fighting against the rules relating to the sexes, when every true statement of their position and the animus of the whole affair shows you that they ask only for the right to express their opinions

2. What grounds have you for declaring that " a state of insubordination has existed ever since the Langan affair?" What revolt, or signs of a coming revolt, or expression calculated to make you think so, has been manifested prior to the present

3. What reasons has the principal for declaring that "the best class of students are opposed to this movement?"

4. What inspired the professor, who signs himself "One Who Knows," to affirm through these columns that those who left are "the virus of discontent and disloyalty?" Wno, in his judgment, are the law-abiding, peaceable and gentlemanly students?

5. By what right did the principal declare that students should not withdraw from the school without his permission? What authority has he to demand that self-sustaining patrons of his school shall beg his permission to withdraw their

6. What power invests him with the authority to deny this permission? 7. How can he expel or suspend a student from his school after that student has severed his connection with the school? 8. If he can do this, why does he do it? Is it to vent his spite upon those leaving another school? tion that he would carry out what he an nounced in the resolutions passed by the faculty, if 500 should leave, why did he enact the farce of having one hundred students suspended over night, and why did he reinstate them the next morning at breakfast? Were the trustees afraid to approve it, or did the principal back

10. On what taugible evidence do the authorities declare that many of those who left are sick of their bargain and want to come back?

The following to the veracious "regular" Lancaster correspondent of the Press. 1. What inspired you to prophesy on Wednesday morning that none would leave but the two young men who had been disciplined? 2. Viewing the actual results, what do you think of yourself as a prophet? Do you contemplate setting up in that as a business? 3. What "deprecatory inscriptions respecting the faculty" did you notice on the banner carried in the parade? Did you or did you not lie when you so communicated to the Press?

4. Did you know what you were talking about when you declared that "the Eraminer defends the course of the faculty as entirely correct?"

5. What proportion of "the men in Lancaster whose opinion is worth anything " have declared to you that they are "stoutly for the faculty and trustees?"

6. How many people besides yourself believe "that for every one who left three will be added?" Does your past success as a prophet inspire you with confidence in your prophetic powers? 7. Do you speak "as one having authority" or as "one of the scribes" when you declare that "the whole trouble arose from the disposition of a few students to disregard the rules regulating the intercourse

8. What do you think of yourself, any of the sexes ?"

ONE WHO DOESN'T KNOW.

A Sharp Criticism from a Responsible Critic. MR. EDITOR: The Millersville affair shows that the new crop of teachers (students) is far superior in refinement to the old crop. The regulation criticised by the new is disgraceful to the old. The imagination that gave birth to it must have been cradled in the low, yellow covered literature of the past. Students of Millersville have reason to blush when they meet the faculty, and thank God that they are purer, better and further removed from the brute than they.

THE SOFT ANSWER.

Reminiscence With a Moral for Millers A graduate of the class of 1872 of Lafayette college, Easton, who resides in Lan-caster, relates a story that will be of in-terest to the students and faculty of the Millersville normal school and the public in general who are exercised over the exciting events which have recently taken place in the normal school.

The method of examination of students of the graduating class gave offence to the students, and John E. Shull, a brilliant member of the class, wrote a paper on the subject and delivered it before one of the societies of the college. It was brimfull istence, and the places that know them of animadversion and sarcasm, and in now know them no more forever. tended to show that the method of examination adopted by the faculty was faulty and indefensible—the tendency being to There has recently appeared in some cram the students, during the last few weeks of the course, with a general smatthe speaker and other members of the class to propose other methods and other rules in lieu of the objectionable ones now in force, assuring them that they would be considered and adopted as soon as their superiority was shown. Having thus acknowledged the imperfections of existing methods and shown his desire to learn wisdom from the boys and urged them to propose their "better the old professor began an argument in which he tried to show the students that while existing methods were no doubt faulty they were the best that the wisdom of the faculty had been able to devise, and that even those features of the rules and regulations which had been so earnestly objected to by the young orator could not be annulled until other and better ones had been adopted.

The result was that when "the boys' were called upon to frame better code than that in force they were unequal to the task and concluded to let well enough alone; and every one of them after the conference had an increased love and respect for Professor March, who was one of the first members of the faculty of Lafayette, and continues to-day to labor in the position in which he has so long been a bright particular star.

THE SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

Views of Various State Papers.

Lancaster New Era Wednesday's procession of the revolted students, with the principal actor in a coach at the head of it as the chief attraction, with the band playing "See the Conquering Hero Comes," reminded every beholder of the scene in Dr. Warren's "Ten Thousand a Year," when a hero of somewhat similar calibre, with the euphonious and alliterative cognomen of Tittlebat Titmouse, accompanied by his friends and a brass band, went to take possession of his newly acquired estate. The picture of the novelist was represented by actual characters with a fidelity that was unmistakable.

The Press Correspondent. Lancaster Inquirer.

The dispatches to the Philadelphia Press from this city concerning the difficulties at to be hasty and hot-blooded and of age to and to preclude them from entering Millersville this week, contained, if possible, more falsehood to the square inch. than the dispatches to the same paper concerning our primary elections. If the dispatches generally published in the Press are as little to be relied on as those it receives from Lancaster, the sooner the establishment closes up the botter for all

Making a Mistake.

Williamsport Banner. President Brooks, in restricting free speech, is making a great mistake. He is destroying the influence of the school for good, and the sooner he allows the stulents of the Millersville school to say what they please, when they please, and where they please, the better it will be. If they tell what is not true, there are, or ought to be, laws to protect the officers of the school. But to condemn and expel a student for simply making a criticism, or criticising on the doings of the faculty, is to exercise an authority used only by tyrants and despots. Something Wrong.

West Chester Kepublican. While we always condemn the irrepressible spirit which actuates most pupils in their rebellion against the managers or faculty of schools, we are inclined to be-lieve that, in this instance, the causes were sufficient to justify the pupils of Millers-ville in rebelling. This, all the more so from the fact that only a little while ago we read and talked about another disturbance at the same school, when the faculty acted in a very hasty and impulsive manner, and took a very positive stand for a time, from which he afterwards receded, from which we inferentially draw the conclusion that he was wrong, in that instance at least. And when this trouble seems to have the sanction of all, or nearly all, the pupils, we are inclined to believe that the faculty is wrong again.

At any rate the proceedings might have been stayed, or affairs arranged satisfactorily, before the large number of seventy pupils should have resigned and be escorted away by the remainder of the pupils with a brass hand with a brass band. There is something wrong, evidently, with the management. which we are very sorry to know, for Millersville at one time was the best normal school in the state.

Neither Sensible Nor Just. Lancaster Inquirer. We cannot regard the course of the faculty as either sensible or just. If the regulations complained of by the students rather than forbidden. If they were not reasonable and right, the more freely they were criticised and the sooner they were made odious to the public and abandoned by the faculty, the better for all con-

It is not likely the wrong was all on one side; no one supposes the course of the students was free from blame, or that they said or did nothing reprehensible. In such a conflict the infirmities of human nature are sure to crop out to some extent on both sides, and it is not likely this instance is an exception to the general rule.

At its conclusion he stepped up to Mr. Shull, shook him by the hand, and warmly complimented him upon the ability he had shown in the discussion of a question that had so sorely perplexed the faculty. In the name of the faculty he thanked the young gentleman for the suggestions he had thrown out, all of which would be duly considered by the faculty and their merits calmly discussed. He called upon intelligent judgment concerning the value had shown in the discussion of a question that they supply teachers. If they are supplying the schools in this way they they should have the help asked for. A few hard facts from Dr. Wichersham, if he is possestion of them, would be of great merits calmly discussed. He called upon intelligent judgment concerning the value harmlessly over; or if not, if the malcon of the normal schools, and would quite overcome their enemies.

The Trouble at Millersville. Philadelphia Bulletin. The state normal school at Millersville is a successful institution and has a reputation second to none in the country for turning out well educated and disciplined teachers. It is all the more to be regretted, therefore, that so serious a disturbance as is now raging there should have broken out. The school is conducted on the principle of co-education of the sexes the only correct principle, but one which must be guarded by strict rules, else, where so many young people are gath ered, mischief will ensue. It appears, however, that the faculty have seen fit to make their rules rigid to severity and to enforce them to the verge of absurdity, holding, for instance, that "it might bring the institution into disrepute" for students to receive their friends on the open campus, refusing to let them see even their nearest relatives except in a small and crowded parlor and forbidding the most innocent social intermingling in the most public places. Finally, on the occasion of a public exercise of some kind, a few days ago, even the limited privileges ordinarily granted were withdrawn. * * * * * *

There are two or three things to be said about this. In the first place, the students were clearly wrong in going to the lengths they did. They knew the rules before they entered the school, and should have been prepared to obey them. They were old enough to know that they were at the institution for the purpose of getting an education, and not to flirt with the girls. On the other hand, the brilliant failure of governors in every age of the world to coerce human nature beyond a certain point should have warned the faculty to make their rules as lenient as possible consistently with good government. They should have remembered that they were dealing not with girls and boys, but with ladies and gentlemen old enough to think for themselves and predisposed to claim the inalienable American right to so. They should have remembe sedate and temperate, and should with the disaffected. The flurry among the students might have been met by a few harmless concessions and their hasty language would have been forgotten soon if it had been quietly overlooked. It is as wise sometimes for a teacher to close his eyes and ears as it is for him generally to keep them open. Finally, it was very in judicious, to say the least, for Dr. Brooks to lose his temper, as his language in dis-missing the rebellous students shows that he did. His threat that they would be forever kept out of that and every other normal school in the state was vindictive and was evidently the utterance of a very angry man. This was an exhibition of weakness on his part. A cool head is the first requisite of a commander, whether of a school or of an army; the man who loses his temper loses half the battle. While, therefore, both sides to this unfortunate controversy have committed errors, it appears that the faculty are most to blame. They disregarded the plain warnings of public opinion in the little community over which they exercised autocratic authority; instead of averting the crisis they hastened it by violent language and arbitrary measures, and when it came they failed to meet it with that dignity and decorum which would have command ed respect if not approval. . It might be suggested that this is a good time to revise the rules of the institution, and place them on a more popular basis; after which both parties might shake hands, ask each other's pardon and try it again. Sitting on the Safety-valve.

Philadelphia North American

The unfortunate collision between the faculty and the students at the Millersville state normal school seems to have been brought about as much by a want of tact and proper discretion on the part of the masters as by any youthful and imprudent J. B. MARTIN & CO. and proper discretion on the part of the impetuosity on the part of the students. Though the present outbreak is in all probability the culmination of a long period of friction, there is no mystery as to its immediate occasion. It appears from the reports published in the local papers that it is contrary to the rules of the institution for pupils to see the friends who visit them anywhere else than in the parlor which has been set aside for that pur-pose; and further, that neither visitors nor students are allowed to be accompanied in the grounds by persons of the opposite sex. These rules may be rigorous, and were reasonable and right, they could defy they may, upon particular occasions, be criticism, and it should have been invited unpleasantly arbitrary in their operation, unpleasantly arbitrary in their operation, but they are not unreasonable. It is obvious that in an institution where pupils of both sexes are received for education, the exercise of exceptional vigilance and the strict enforcement of appropriate reg-ulations are not only expedient, but abso lutely indespensable.

Had the faculty done no more then to insist upon the scrupulous observance of these regulations, they would have occupied an impregnable position and have re ceived the undivided support of an intelligent public. Unfortunately they went further than this. In their determination Both the attempt of the authorities of to make their authority felt and respected the school to prevent discussion of their rules or actions was an act of despotism for which there is no justification, and against which the students were perfectly were the rules of the institution; that content with declaring that such and such right in rebelling. They would have been those who did not approve of the said rules unworthy the name of American citizens were at liberty to depart and look for had they not done so; and whatever evil a school whose code of manageconsequences to the school may result must be laid at the door of those who at tempted to suppress the inborn right of free thought and free speech. Our great common school system is designed to for the establishment in whose benefits they the strengthen and build an independence. ter, strengthen and build up independence, thought it worth their while to share free thought and free speech, as the strongest and surest basis for our great republican system; and our normal thought it worth their while to share. This is what the teachers should have done and no more than this. They, however, thought proper to issue an edict directing This is what the teachers should have done thought proper to issue an edict directing schools are but a means to that end. But that the rules should be obeyed without if instead of being a nursery for freemen, any complaint being made or any criticism they are to foster tyranny on the one hand and servility on the other, better a thousand times that they be blotted out of exrules were much discussed in private among the pupils, and that the discussion seemed to be promoting a spirit of insubordination.
