A canal boat containing coal came very near being sunk last evening. The colored men who were employed to unload it, dis obeyed the order of the captain of the boat, hence the accident. They were told how to unlead it, but they failed to do so and instead took coal out from the forepart and the stern, leaving the bulk in the centre. The planks sprung and the water washed in, but the boat was saved from sinking by the timely arrival of the captain who put the men to work pumping. A Spanish Slave.

A Daring Young Lady. A recent issue of the Crawford county, Ind Democrat has an account of the ex-E. Gebhart, daughter of Mr. J. F. Gebhart, superintendent of the New Albany woollen and cotton mills. It will be read ances whom Miss Gebhart made on her visit to Columbia last year : "On the morning of the 7th inst., a gentleman from a neighboring river town arrived at the Wyandotte cave all equipped with ropes, etc., to see some of the mys teries of the unexplored part of the Wyan dotte. On the 8th inst, he started with a guide and several couple from New Albany, among whom was Miss Letitic C. Gebhart; to make discoveries in the 'old cave.' They at once went to a place that had bafiled all the daring explorers. The ropes were tied about the gentleman, and before the preparations were finished for him to start down into the dreadfal looking hole, his nerve failed him and he refused to go. whereupon the above named lady stepped forward and requested to be let down by the rope. It so astonished the crowd at first that they refused to let her go, but upon her insisting, she was made ready for the descent. She was furnished with candles, and started down in the pit After several minutes she sent word back to let her have more rope so as to make an exploration of the room she was in, and in a few minutes returned and sent the rope up for some of the rest to come down. This new discovery is said to be the grandest part of the cave, and at the same time one of the most dangerous looking places to be seen, and this feat attempted by Miss Gebhart is considered by the manager and guides to have shown more pluck and cool bravery than in any discovery that has heretofore been made. The following is to be found in the register at the cave : " 'Wyandotte Cave, June 8, 1881. Miss Letitia E. Gebhart, of New Albany, Ind., was the first lady with pluck enough to descend into the pit fifty feet below the level of the old cave. On account of the dangerous opening and the daring required to attempt the feat, privilege has been accorded her of naming the place. She has bestowed upon it the title of 'Gebhart's

You may watch for its appearance in the morning in the northeast, close to the horizon, between half past 2 and 3 o'clock, and it will be strikingly visible as long as night lasts. If the comet is approaching the sun it will increase in brilliancy every day. This is the first bright comet since the spectroscope has been perfected, and this instru-

MEETING OF THE STREET COMMITTEE.

Helgian Blocks in North Queen Street-Sewer on West Chestnut Street to be Laid. A meeting of the street committee was held last evening. The bids for paving with Belgian blocks North Queen street, from Orange to Chestnut, were considered, and the contract was awarded to Messrs. Cunningham & McNichol, at $2.46 per square yard. There was a lower bid but the committee, from information before them, regarded it as unsatisfactory. The committee decided to lay the blocks no farther than the south side of Chestnut street, property holders north of Chestnut street having failed to contribute a pro rata share to pay for laying the pavement.

The number of guests from Lancaster, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other places was very large, there being almost 500 people present during the evening. The presents were fine and numerous. The bride's father gave her a check for $500, and from her brother she received $100 in gold. The boarders at the Black Horse presented the couple with a beautiful silver tea set. Tanner may have to raise enough by subscription among his congregation to defray his ex-
