A very creditable production, the delivery of which engaged the closest attention of the audience, in which, judging from the prolonged applause and numerous flowers awarded the young speakers had many friends.

Address-"Wrongs of Ireland"-Frank B. McClain. This was a ringing protest against the present system of English rule exercised over that island far across the sea, famous in song and story. The speaker paid a glowing eulogy to the Irish predicted that the time is not far distant when the people will arise in their pristine power and majesty, break the galling chains that now bind them and stand forth free men once more. The young Celt from the outset had the cordial sympathy of his hearers, and at the conclusion of his oration, which was marked by extreme spirit in diction and delivery, he was overwhelmed with applause and compelled to come forward a second time and bow his acknowledgments.

Unconsciously perhaps we are nevertheless continually sowing seed that will bear fruit, and sure will the harvest be. How important, therefore, that we should sow such seed only as are pure and good, and that we should govern our lives by correct principles. God the great Father will give the increase, and joy will then be the rich harvest of our sowing. Many pretty thoughts deftly woven together and read in excellent voice. Too frequently young people allow their predilections to fun carry them beyond the bounds of propriety into the domain of mischief, and many wounded hearts are the result of thoughtless words and actions that were inspired "only for fun." The young lady had many admirers in the audience who testified their appreciation of her creditable effort with a profusion of elegant floral tributes.

Great applause and a profusion of superb floral tokens indicated the special favor or the audience.

Essay-"Moral Whitewash"-Miss Liz zie Heleina. The young lady, with a keenness of analysis that would have done credit to a much older head, pointed out the disposition manifested by many historians to cover the characters of their heroes with a false glory, but at the same time there are those who seem to make it a point to discover the blemishes and foibles. The young essayist thought it the part of charity rather to err on the side of kindness than to exercise undue severity in criticism. This was a production creditable alike to the head and heart of the essayist, Its diction was chaste, and the thoughts were presented in a finely spun that evinced careful preparation. It was read in a clear and agreeeble tone of voice and fairly won for the lady the loud applause and rich flowers accorded her as she retired.

The speaker proved himself an earnest admirer of the giant power that has exercised such a great influence upon the progress of events in the physicial world. There is always hope for a man of his life. Last winter he went to Ohio if he honestly works. Man was made to and in the spring began to work with David Ulsh, who resides near the village of Caledonia, in Marion county, that state. On the 25th of May, Stewart (his time with Ulsh being up) went to the village and there purchased a blanket and some other articles for a buggy. On that night a bay horse belonging to Mr. Ulsh was stolen from the stable. Previous to this Stewart had told his employer that he intended purchasing a horse for the purpose of riding home to Lancaster county. He was at once suspected and was traced as far as Wooster. Mr. Ulsh then wrote a letter to Sheriff Strine, giving him an account of the larceny with a description of the horse and the man, who had told him that he lived near the Nickel There is in it a fascination, a magic that operates upon our sensibility most potent.

A short time ago the sheriff received another letter from Ulsh, who stated that he had received a letter from Harrisburg informing him that Stewart had been seen there. Sheriff Strine and deputies have been making inquiry concerning Stewart of late, and last evening the following despatch was

On the way they heard that he could be found at the house of Uriah Eckert, in Paradise township. The officers drove to the place, and when they stopped at the barn they saw Stewart carrying a bunch of hay. Deputy Sheriff Strine jumped from the buggy and caught Stewart just as he was making ready to run. The man was brought to this city and was placed in prison. Word was then tele-graphed to Mr. Ulsh, informing him of the arrest, and Stewart will be held until the arrival of an officer, The prisoner denies that he stole the horse. Stewart is a son of Charles Stewart, and he does not bear the best reputation. He has been in a number of scrapes in the neighborhood where he resided. He left this county last winter because he was this county last winter because he was wanted for cutting up a lot of harness belonging to James Bowers and stealing a portion of them.
