MONDAY EVENING, JULY 25, 1881. THE PRESIDENT'S RELAPSE.

THE PHYSICIANS IN DOUBT.

Quick Trip of the Surgeons.

Critical Day at the National Capital. Yesterday was a very critical day in the condition of the distinguished patient at Saturday led to the sending for the consulting surgeons. Dr. Frank H. Hamilton, of New York, received the summons at his house at 1:30, p, m. It took him only ten minutes to prepare for the journey. He left the house at 1:40 with the remark that he did not know when the next train would start, but that he would get a car-riage and go to the ferry so that he would be ready to take it. The despatch, which was brief, he took with him. He hastened in a carriage to the Debrosses street ferry, where he learned that the first train for Washington was over the Pennsylvania railroad at 3:40 o'clock. It would arrive in Washington at 10:20 o'clock, p. m. Some time was spent in inquiries as to the departure of trains on the roads. Then he City passenger waiting room, where he was recognized while he was making inquiries at the palace car window. Superintendent Jackson, who was in his office in another part of the depot, was sent for. A very brief time sufficed to make him aware of the situation. He hurried away from Dr. Hamilton, and seven minutes later the latter was rushing out of the depot on a special train. It was 2:47 o'clock p. m. when the depot master and the train despatchers received notice to be spry, Unfortunately, none of the seven new monster engines was on hand, but engine 915, one of the best of the ordinary engines, with a five foot driving wheel, was hitched to a new Eastlake coach, and at 2:54 it was run out of the depot. The new Eastlake coaches are chiefly remarka ble for their high ceilings, their low and comfortable seats, and for the elegance of and ash. Each panel is carved after an original design. They run very smoothly.

The special train would have had no graphic orders. There would have been ordinarily on the south-bound track between the time the despatchers received potice that the special was to start and the time of its expected arrival in Philadelphia, seventeen freight trains and two passenger trains. The freight trains were all got out of the way one after another on side tracks in time to allow the special to tor fifteen minutes. Nevertheless, he arrived at Philadelphia at 4:45 p. m. The actual running time to Philadelphia from Jersey City was, therefore, one hour and thirty-six minu! . Were the distance to Philadelphia ninety miles, instead of eighty-nine miles, and had the time been six minutes 1 's, the rate of travel would have been a mile a minute. It was thought that since there was only one car, and that containing only one man, engine 915 was practically as good as one of the new engines. The engineer was A. Vandergrift, and the conductor was H. W.

At Philadelphia a stop of only three minutes was made to change engines. During that three minutes Dr. Agnew, the other consulting physician, who had been made acquainted by telegraph of Dr.

ington, got into the coach.
The two a ved in Washington at 7:50 p. m. A carriage was awaiting them, and five minutes afterwards they were at the White House. The two surgeons were met at the depot by Dr. Bliss, and were driven rapidly to the White House. On the way Dr. Bliss acquainted them with the facts of the situation which had made necessary their hasty summons. At that time Dr. B thought the crisis passed. The physicians at their examination, about 6 p. m., had inserted a flexible catheter into the wound, and pressed it against what had been an obstruction to the catheter inserted this morning, and which had prevented its further progress on the previous occasion. With a very slight pressure they were able to work around the obst. action and open a passage, whereupon there came quite a 104, temperature 99.2, respiration 23, free discharge of pus of a greenish color, [Signed] D. W. Bliss, showing by its character that it had been gathering for some time. There were, however, no evidences of pyaemia, and the physicians did not apprehend that it exists. Immediately after this operation, the president, who had been very restless and in pain, was much re'eved, and all the symptoms became more favorable, there Democratic Rejoicings Over the New York being a lowering in all the figures. When the physicians got back to the White House at about 8 o'clock they found History repeat White House at about 8 o'clock they found their patient in a much more favorable and a time since the days of Valentinian has a seemed to be setting in again with encouraging distinctness. So favorable was his condition that after a passing inspection of the situation, all the doctors agreed that it would be unnecessary and unwise to excite the president and bring on inflammation by any surgical examination of the wound. They, therefore, let the president alone to curative nature, while in an adja-cent room they held a long and earnest consultation, going over among themselves the whole history of the case since the d parture of the visiting physicians up to that time. It was decided as the result of this conference not to disturb the patient, who was now sleeping quietly, until the morning, unless there should be some unfavor able developments which required prompt and searching attention. This review of the day may need no explanation to show its significant character. The gravity of the crisis was instantly apparent to all who have followed the history of the wound. The discharge of pus stopped. That was the one great fact. It was attended by the presence of symptoms which commonly attend an unfavorable and fatal turn in similar wounds. The pus must be getten out of the body at any risk, or else it would poison the blood in its attempt to escape through the system, and would result in inevitable death to the patient. The symptoms, which were rather hinted at than told in the bulletins, resembled those which accompany this terrible pyemia

"When a person is about to be attacked by pyamia the wound usually becomes dry and unhealthy. The pus which is sideration—that the two Senators elected secreted is scanty and thin. At the same by the Albany Legislature to succeed time there is increased frequency of the Conkling and Platt, the ostensible repreing to Illinois, where he is now confined, pulse and breathing. the breath has a faint sweetish odor, the skin is moist, and after a well marked rigor it is bathed in sweat. There are occasional shiverings, and wandering pains are felt in various parts. With all this there is great prostration and fapid wasting, and a tendency to delirium. The urine often contains albumen.

Now, as a matter of fact, the pus, while the discharge had not stopped entirely, had become very scanty. There was increased frequency of pulse and breathing; the temperature had rapidly risen, and the president had had three distinct chills, followed in each instance by a perspiration Washington. The alarming symptoms of and a falling of the temperature. The complexion had become, in the language of Dr. Reyburn "dusky," the respiration say the least, on plausible grounds. But happily, it can be said on the very best disease has not yet manifested itself. As already noted, the distress and fever of the patient seem to have been due to the simple accumulation of pus in the wound, as is shown by the fact that on the removal of this disturbing element the patient rapidly began to return to the nearly normal conditions which have crossed the ferry and entered the Jersey marked his illness for the last few days, At this hour, however, he has not recovered fully, and it cannot be said that the grounds of fear are entirely removed. MIDNIGHT.-The day is done and passes away with the growing hope that the worst is passed; the visiting physicians have gone to bed and to sleep at Attorney General MacVeagh's residence; the president, under the influence of morphine, is resting tranquilly, and the attentive nurses at his bedside are rejoiced to notice the steady improvement in all the symptoms. The doctors say little and look grave, but they think they have the wound under control, and that all is going well again. Certainly no positively bad signs appear, and this, in the circumstances, is cause for rejoicing. Had blood poisoning set in, as feared at one time, his condition would now be far different from what it is, and far worse. In short, he is their panellings of light unstained maple | distinctly better, and the town has gone to bed with a feeling that the set-back has been only temporary after all. The examination at 8 o'clock in the morning preference on the road except for tele will probably tell the story one way or the > July 24-1 A. M.-At this hour the president's condition continues favorable. His pulse has fallen to 100, and his temperature and respiration are lower. Drs. Bliss and Reyburn are watching to night. The other four physicians are at home asleep. The president is also asleep.

10 A. M.—The president was more restroar past them without slacking speed, but the two passenger trains delayed the doc another rigor just before midnight. This moraing at 8:15 his pulse was 98, temper ature 98.4, respiration 18. A consultation was then held with Dr. Hamilton and Dr. Agnew, after which a counter-opening was made through the integument of the back about three inches below the wound, which it is hoped will facilitate the drainage of pus and increase the chances of recovery. Lunatic Who Believed Himself the Right to the Man Who Saved On March 3, 1877, there came to Wash ington a man named Wm. Myers. His home was in Illinois. He was a man of gentlemanly address and pleasing manners, and seemed to be about 50 years old. He had with him quite a large sum of money, all in gold. He registered at the Imperial hotel, and was assigned to room 10. His appearance was quiet, and at-

Mr. Hayden had been employed in some capacity in the House of Representatives, capitol. He was accustomed frequently to show strangers over the building, and it was in that capacity, as a sort of guide, that he had met Myers. The appearance of the man was so prepossessing, his manner so courteous and his conversation so good, that Mr. Hayden was astonished when he discovered that he (Myers) was of unsound mind. In walking through the building with Myers he asked Mr. Hayden his name. "My name is Joseph," Mr. Hayden replied.

He then showed Mr. Hayden a ticket of admission, which he had obtained from one of the pages of the House or Senate, which would have admitted him to the stand. Mr. Hayden said that it then flashed upon him that this man was insane, or at least had a delusion, and that he had come ent time than he has been during the past to Washington impelled by that delusion, with the purpose of shooting Mr. Hayes, while in the act of taking the oath. While meditating what was best to do, Myers took from his pocket a twenty dollar gold piece and placed it in a conspicuous position in one end of the room, went to the other end, turned, and, drawing a revolver from his pocket, fired, the bullet hitting the coin exactly in the centre. He then turned to Hayden and asked for his approval of his marksmanship. Mr. Hayden has the pistol at this day. All of the barrels are loaded except the single one which was discharged at the gold piece Mr. Hayden then became alarmed for his own and only by humoring Mr. Myers in the notion that he was his Joseph, succeeded in getting the revolver from him. Mr. Hayden remained with Myers the rest of that day, his idea being that it was possible that Myers might be the tool of some conspirator. If that was so he wished to Mr. Hayden left Myers early on Sunday morning, March 4, and went to the capitol where the closing scenes of the electoral count were being transacted. Hayden said that, becoming satisfied that there Hayden left him under the pretence that Carroll, a man in whom Myers had expressed warm confidence, to come over to Washington and witness the prophet's inauguration. Myers had told Hayden in commanded by God to do this act, and that he was George Washington's heir to the presidency of the United States. Hayfaction of the expressive valedictory of the needed rest in order to successfully go original Catiline (Croly's). "I go," he said; "I go—but mebbe I will come back!" To this Myers assented, and when Hayden quit the room he locked the door on the outside.

The affair was kept very quiet at Mr.

Hayes's request, in view of the excitable state of public feeling at the time. But Mr. Hayes seems, according to Mr. Hay-den, to have exhibited far less gratitude than it would be supposed would be shown by one man to another who had saved his life. Soon after Mr. Hayes was naugurated Mr. Hayden went to the White House to intercede for executive clemency for a client of his who was being criminally prosecuted. This occasion was the first time that he had ever spoken to Mr. Hayes of his service, and at Mr. Hayes's request he gave him a detailed account of the affair. When he had done

Hayes said : "I should like to have you take the Blue Book and select any reasonable office within my gift, and I should be happy to bestow it upon you."

Mr. Hayden said that he told Mr. Hayes that he had not come there to seek an office and that he had not voted for him for president. Mr. Hayes replied that that would make no difference, and gave him a sheet of his official paper and told him to make an application. Hayden has this paper now. He did make an application for a position as special agent of the postoffice department It was endorsed by Mr. Hayes, and he has this endorsement now. Mr. Hayden did not receive the appointment, however, but was recommended after a long time by Hayes for a position as workman in the treasury department, a position which, of course, he did not accept. About a year afterward Mr. Hayes recommended him to Mr. Carl Schurz for a position in the interior department, and this resulted in his being appointed temporarily to a laborer's position at a salary of $600, although the duties were clerical. Subsequently Mr. Hayden made application for a promotion and sent the application to the president for his endorsement. The president endorsed upon it the special request that it have favorable consideration, and sent it back to the department. Mr. Hayden still has this paper, which the writer saw. The interest which these various papers and recommendations have lies in the fact that Mr. Hayes has recently denied ever tempt to assassinate him. Mr. Hayden was in January, 1879, appointed to a position as copyist in the pension office, and subsequently was ap pointed assistant United States district attorney, a position which he resigned a few months ago. Mr. Hayden says that soon after resigning he visited Mr. Hayes at his home in Fremont, Ohio, some time in April. Mr. Hayes talked with him over the service which he had done, and suggested that a word from him to Gen. Garfield would procure him (Hayden) an official position which would enable him to support his family without drawing upon the estate of his wife, who is wealthy. Mr. Hayden frankly confessed that he had an ambition for a political life, and that a position in keeping with his years and ability would have been gratifying to him. When he left Mr. Hayes the latter said suggested that Mr. Hayden lay the facts of his service before President Garfield and intimated that he would privately communicate with the president himself upon his arrival in Washington. Mr. Hayden ealled upon President Garfield, who told him that he would very favorably consider any request that Mr. Hayes might make in his behalf. About ten days after-ward Hayden called upon Gen. Garfield again and learned from Mr. Brown, the president's private secretary, that Mr. Hayes had written to the president concerning him, and that the president di-rected him (Brown) to say that he did not see how he could make any move in the matter at present. Thereupon Mr. Hayden asked Mr. Brown what Mr. Hayes had said. Brown replied in substance that Hayes had written as follows Mr. Hayden labors under the delusion that he rendered me a great service by sav-ing my life. If this is true I can only say that I never was apprised of it while in Mr. Hayden, in view of the fact that he had apprised Mr. Hayes of it, and that Mr. Hayes had cast an imputation upon his word of honor, and had put him in the light of a falsifier to Gartield, at once communicated with some prominent members of Congress in this city, and at their suggestion it is probable that a resolution will be introduced next winter in the Senate, in view of the recent attempt to as sassinate President Garfield, for the appointment of a committee to investigate the facts in this case, not so much that Mr. Hayden's word may be vindicated as that some suggestion may be arrived at by the committee for the protection of presi dents. Those who are acquainted with the facts in the Myers case-the physician, McDevitt and others-believe that had not Myers been discovered by Mr. Hayden, he would certainly have made the attempt on Mr. Hayes's life,
