Ant Antics.

Sir John Lubbock "Considers Her Ways" and Describes Interestingly Her Keenness of Vision.

Sir John Lubbock recently read a paper, "Observations on Ants," before the Linnæan Society of London. He said that in one of his former papers he had given a series of experiments made with light of different colors in order, if possible, to determine whether ants had the power of distinguishing colors. For this purpose he utilized the dread which ants, when in their nests, have of light. Not unnaturally, if a nest is uncovered they think they are being attacked, and hasten to carry their young away to a darker and, as they suppose, a safer place. He satisfied himself by hundreds of experiments that if he exposed to light most of a nest, but left any part of it covered over, the young would certainly be conveyed to the dark portion. In this manner he ascertained that the different rays of the spectrum act on them in a different manner from that in which they effect us, for instance, that ants are specially sensitive to the violet rays. But he was anxious to go beyond this and to attempt to determine how far their limits of vision agree with ours. We all know that if a ray of white light is passed through a prism it is broken up into a beautiful band of colors—the spectrum. To our eyes it is bounded by red at the one end and violet at the other, the edge being sharply marked at the red end, but less abruptly at the violet. But a ray of light contains, besides the rays visible to our eyes, others which are called, though not with absolute correctness, heat rays and chemical rays. These, so far from being bounded by the limits of our vision, extend far beyond it, the heat rays at the red, the chemical rays at the violet end. He wished, under these circumstances, to determine, if possible, whether the limits of vision in the case of ants was the same as with us. This interesting problem he endeavored to solve as follows: If an ant's nest be disturbed, the ants soon carry their grubs and chrysalides underground again to a place of safety. Sir John availing himself of this habit, placed some ants with larvæ and pupæ between two plates of glass about one-eighth of an inch apart—a distance which leaves just room enough for the ants to move about freely. He found that if he covered over part of the glass with any opaque substance the young were always carried to the part thus darkened. He then tried placing over the nest different colored glasses and found that if he placed side by side a pale yellow glass and one of deep violet the young were always carried under the former, showing that though the light yellow was much more transparent to our eyes, it was, on the contrary, much less so to the ants. So far he had gone in experiments already recorded. But he now wished, as already mentioned, to go further and test the effect upon them of the ultra-violet rays, which to us are invisible. For this purpose, among other experiments, he used sulphate of quinine, and besulphide of carbon, both of which transmit all the visible rays, and are therefore perfectly colorless and transparent to us, but which completely stop the ultra-violet rays. Over a part of one of his nests he placed flat-sided bottles containing the above mentioned fluids and over another part a piece of dark violet glass; in every case the larvæ were carried under the transparent liquids and not under the violet glass. Again, he threw a spectrum into a similar nest and found that if the ants had to choose between placing their young in the ultra-violet rays or in the red they preferred the latter. He infers, therefore, that the ants perceive the ultra-violet rays, which to our eyes are quite invisible. Now, as ever ray of homogeneous light which we can perceive at all appers to us a distinct color, it seems probable that these ultra-violet rays must make themselves apparent to the ants as a distinct and separated color (of which we can form no idea) but as unlike the rest as red is from yellow or green from violet. The question also arises whether white light to these insects would differ from our white light in containing this additional color. At any rate, as few of the colors in nature are pure colors, but almost all arise from the combination of rays of different wavelengths, and as in such cases the visible resultant would be composed not only of the rays which we see but of these and the ultra-violet it would appear that the colors of objects and the general aspect of nature must present to them a very different appearance from what they do to us. Similar experiments which Sir John also made with some of the lower crustacea point to the same conclusions; but the account of these experiments he reserved to a future occasion. He then proceeded to describe some experiments made on the sense of direction possessed by ants; but it would not be easy to make these intelligible without figures. After detailing some further experiments on the power of recognizing friends, he gave some facts which appear to show that ants by selection of food can produce either a queen or a worker at will from a given egg. Lastly, he stated that he had still some ants which he had begun to observe in 1874, and which are still living and in perfect good health; they now, therefore, must be more than seven years old, being by far the oldest insects on record.

The Editorial "We."

Guardian.

When will our religious papers stop using the editorial "we" to indicate the editor, instead of the paper.? We constantly see such phrases as "When we were sailing up the Hudson," "When we preached in Boston," We were confined to our bed last week," all which make the editor of quite too much importance. The last notable example we meet is in The Baltimore Presbyterian, which says editorially of a child's magazine:

"We never had such a visitor when we were a child. Had we, we would have been a better and smarter little girl."

Incredible.

F. A. Scratch, druggist, Ruthven, Ont. writes: "I have the greatest confidence in your Burdock Blood Bitters. In one case with which I am personally acquainted their success was almost incredible. One lady told me that half a bottle did her more good than hundreds of dollars worth of medicine she had previously taken." Price $1. For sale at H. B. Cochran's drug store, 137 North Queen street, Lancaster.

Factory Facts.

Close confinement, careful attention to all factory work, gives the operatives pallid faces poor appetite, languid, miserable feelings, poor blood, inactive liver, kidneys and urinary troubles, and all the physicians and medicine in the world cannot help them unless they get out doors, use Hop Bitters, made of the purest and best remedies, and especially for such cases, having abundance of health, sunshine and rosy cheeks in them. None need suffer if they use them freely. They cost but a trifle. See another column.
