MR. BENNEIT AT NEWPORT.

Why all Newport Admirers Mr. James Gor don Bennett—Astonishing a Rich Young Gentleman from Vermont—Mr. Ben-nett's Hospitality—His Enormous Income—How He Holds the Helm of His

THE DIVERSIONS OF THE EDITOR OF A SUCCESSFUL AMERICAN NEWS-PAPER.

Newport Correspondence Chicago Times. When I came here more than a month ago everything was waiting for Mr. Bennett. There could be no polo because Mr. James Gordon Bennett was not here. There were no college receptions because "nothing could be done in Newport until pleasure and business of the season. knew that the Herald man was no end of a swell, and spent a great deal of money, patronizing amusements and giving extenstand why a community where million-aires are as plenty as blackberries should amount of business for tradesmen, perhaps in a feeble sort of way, but still after a fashion, without him. But somehow prayers of the trades people were answered; the smoke stack of the yacht Polynia hove in sight in the harbor, and Mr. James Gordon Bennett actually alighted on the wharf. After that matters in Newport began to mend rapidly. Certainly there was a perceptible difference in the appearance of things, and all because a sandy-haired, thin faced, ordinary-looking youngish man sat on the veranda of a large stone house in the busiest part of the town, and kicked his heels against the legs of his chair. I could not see that he did much else for the first few days after his arrival, but everbody scemed perfectly satisfied. Business did not exactly boom with the trades men and hotel proprietors, because the weather was too cool in New York and Boston. The dog days of the rest of the world are Newport's halcyon days, and the dog days were slow in arriving; but I could see that people felt that the one great requisite to the success of the season had been secured, and that with Mr. Bennett and a little hot weather all would be well with Newport. I think they were right, for at last the hot weather has come, the hotels are full, the trades people are smiling, and I have begun to understand why it is that Mr. Bennett is so important a factor in the success of the sea-

It is not at all surprising that the permanent residents here, who live for the go ashore in his own boat, but whistles for one of the local boatmen to come off and get him. When he reaches the wharf people perceive that he has not had one of his own carriages come for him, but a carriage from a livery stable. To supply his table with fish, of which he is very fond, he hunts up a young dealer who is just starting in business, and buys of him. His patronage of local tradesmen is very great, and is equitably distributed. And the good he does them does not come so much from his direct purchases as from the patronage which he causes in others, so to speak. His entertainments, for which the supplies are obtained here as far as practicable, are emulated by other swells, and his way of patronizing local dealers is naturally emulated also. He contributes to sports, offers prizes for boatmen, and stimulates activity of every sort. The Casino is the great central institution of Newport. It attracts many visitors, and is a place of amusement for townspeople as well as for visitors, and but for Mr. Bennett there would have been no Casino. haven't a slang dictionary at hand to give I think that a swell is a person who seeks to make a great display, either with money or without it, and that the word does not necessarily apply to a rich man, who, without making an exhibition of himself, spends his money lavishly for his own pleasure. Mr. Bennett may have been a swell in every sense of the word at one time, but he does not appear to me to be one new. I cannot illustrate the difference between the two sorts of men better than by contrasting the appearance of Mr. Bennett the other day at the polo grounds, with a fellow who is unmistakably a tremendously heavy swell. The latter individual, one Ely Goddard by name, came down here last week from Vermont, where his uncle or some other male relative owns a copper mine, with the evident determina tion to totally eclipse Mr. Bennett. Godhat. He swung up at the most conspicuous place in the polo grounds, and calmly awaited the advent of Mr. Bennett. Presthrough the gate, and in it was Mr. Bennett, wearing the same old gray suit that he wore here all last summer, and looking the very incarnation of simplicity and humility. I believe that for once Ely Goddard wished that he was driving a village cart instead of a coach and four. BOOTS & SHORS.

| Fence and taken standing room on "dead head hill"—a long ledge of rocks which command the best possible view of the command the best possible view of the whole polo field, and which is always covered with by the rabble of "citizens on foot" when the games take place. These rocks, by the way, would have been deprived of their commanding view of the last constitution some work is received that constitution some work is receive field by the erection of a high board fence if Mr. Bennett had not interposed his veto to the proposition. The citizens of New-port, thanks to Mr. Bennett, can see the polo games to better advantage than any one within the disclosure, and see them without money or without price.

The man who shows such a dilecate con or three months each year is not at all handsome or striking in personal appear-ance. His face is long and thin, and wears an expression of settled melancholy, as if the pleasures of the world had palled on him. He does not seem at all broken down in health, and does not have the appearance of a man whom dissipation has worn out, but he does look as though the world yielded him no further enjoyment, and as whole the concern is very successfully if his only occupations now were to kill the managed. Its income has greatly in-time. Certainly he has provided himself creased since the elder Mr. Bennott died, time. Certainly he has provided himself with excellent weapons to kill it with. His house here, which he bought some time since for $68,000, he has converted into a palace. He calls it Stone Villa, and Mr. Bennett comes." Cottagers, tradesmen, "sports," boatmen, fishermen—the whole community—seemed anxiously waiting for Mr. Bennett to inaugurate the advanced the money with which it is built, and holds a mortgage of $100,000 on it—on and holds a mortgage of $100,000 on it—on Bellevue avenue, the principal street in the new part of the town. Stone Villa is a large, plain, two story structure of granite, originally square, but now provided sive entertainments, and that he would naturally be a jewel in the eyes of the tradesmen; but I could not quite under-with a broad and airy veranda. The grounds, which the owner has just decorated with some costly and beautiful marnot enjoy itself and make a certain ble statues bought in Italy, poised curiously on swivels or pivots, so that they turn about, are surrounded with a low granite wall, which does not obstruct the view of even a child. Inside the house everything is sumptuous. Livericd servants are always in attendance, day and night, relieving each other in phalanxes. The octagon dining room, which has windows opening to the air on all of its eight sides but one, is a marvel of completeness. From the host's seat at the chief table—an elaborately carved affair eight feet across, and made, by the way, by a local cabinet maker—electric bells communicate with all parts of the house, enabling him to communicate with any servant he wants. In this dining room the tables are always spread; in the kitchen cooks are always on duty, and Mr. Bennett's friends are at liberty to come in and order what they want at any hour of the day or night. It is "hot meals at all hours" at this establishment, and free meals, too, to all who enjoy Mr. Bennett's friendship. The host may be said to entertain every night, for there are always guests at his house, and their wants are carefully provided for.

Stone Villa is strictly a bachelor's hall the greater part of the time. The only female member of the household is the housekeeper, who is elderly. All other servants, including cooks and chamber maids, are men. But, notwithstanding the almost exclusively masculine character of the household, Mr. Bennett does not deny himself the pleasure of feminine companionship. The ladies of society most part off the summer residents, have his social irregularities or else have fora high regard for Mr. Bennett. Whatever given them, for they welcome him freely he can do to help their interests he does. to their entertainments and attend his, When he lands from his yacht he does not and often, accompanied by their husbands, call at his house. When he makes a yachting party to go out on the Polynia, which is quite often, he has no difficulty in getting together a very brilliant and exclusive little assemblage. These yachting parties of Mr. Bennett's, by the way, are characterized by all his usual munificence. Last summer he took a party up to Rocky Point on the Polynia and gave them a clam bake. The usual price per plate at clam bakes at this place is 50 cents. Mr. Bennett's cost $20 for each guest. The table was spread with his own silver, too, and the wine was from his own cellar. You can imagine, perhaps—I can't—what the mere eatables must have been to cost $20 a plate. Speaking of his yacht reminds me that Mr. Bennett is not at all satisfied with the Polynia, whose speed does not equal that of Lorillard's steam yacht, to which that gentleman, who has evidently been reading Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia," has given the name of Radha. The Polynia, think, is infinitely more beautiful than the Radha, and her speed is sufficient for an ordinary mortal, but the rakish Radha I think that I do wrong, perhaps, in an ordinary mortal, but the rakish Radha alluding to Mr. Bennett as a "swell." I beats her, and that is enough to condemn her in Mr. Bennett's eyes. He is accordme the precise meaning of that term, but ingly having a new steam yacht built at Newburg-on-the-Hudson, which will certainly be the largest, and probably the fastest, yacht in the world. Upon it Mr. Benuett will make a tour around the world. Mr. Bennett's stables are as much an object of his pride as his house and his yacht The stables on his own grounds are not large enough to accommodate his horses and carriages, and he has been compelled to rent two others in the immediate vicinity. His eight polo ponies take up a good deal of room as well as a good deal of the attention of their owner. Besides these. which he occasionally uses for other purposes than polo, as the freak may seize him, there are sixteen carriage horses of various sizes and styles, ranging from large coach horses to ponies for phaetons. He has also every conceivable sort of car-riage, ranging from the coach, to be drawn by four or six horses, down to the dard, who, as I have seen it charged in the daintiest little village cart. These expen-Vermont newspapers, last year intimidated | sive turnouts are not often seen, however. his employees into electing him to the Vermont Legislature, and who astonishes the natives up there by driving the most ex- he drives himself. He is seldom accomtraordinary turn-outs, came down here with his Tally-ho coach, evidently feeling that he would be as much an object of adding that he would be as much an object of adding that he would be as much an object of adding that he would be as much an object of adding the same more comfortable which is a servent. I imagine that if I had a yearly income of $750,000 l should find some more comfortable which is a servent. miration here as he was in Vermont. Of course he went out to the polo grounds with his four in-hand. He was dressed in a checked suit, loud in color and of the datest English cut. Upon his fingers glittered nine rings, and his dashing tout en essemble was crowned with a tail white hat. He swing up at the most conspient ordinary single carriage here for years. It is simply a diminutive dog cart, unpainted, two wheeled, with two seats, facing fore and aft, and very uncomfortable. It ently a village cart—the two-wheeled, unpainted little contrivance that every boy and girl in Newport drives—hove in sight

It is a great mistake to suppose that Mr. Bennett has no active share in the management of the Herald simply because he spends almost all of his time away from New York. I doubt whether there is a newspaper proprietor or editor-in-chief in The magnificent greensward upon which this country who keeps so close a watch the polo games were playing was set apart of his journal's affairs as Mr. Bennett and prepared by Mr. Bennett's munificence. The brilliant spectacle of the players grams from the home office, and directs charging across the turf would not have all the important moves which the paper charging across the turf would not have been seen if Mr. Bennett had not set the fashion; the glittering mass of equipages with their burden of fair women and more or less corpulent men, had come there, in Messengers are continually running back or less corpulent men, had come there, in Messengers are continually running back acertain sense, at Mr. Bennett's call, and yet there was rather less "style" about him than any other visitor on the grounds. We solicit the Delicacies of the Season. We solicit the lindeed unless he had gone outside the there is a consultation of editors, and at indeed, unless he had gone outside the there is a consultation of editors, and at fence and taken standing room on "dead that consultation some word is received with him, who frequently writes torials at his dictation or in obedience to his suggestions, and tele-graphs them to the Herald. Every day, moreover, a copy of the Herald is sent to Mr. Bennett, which has the name of the writer of every article in the paper, from leading editorial down to the smallest twosideration for the welfare and pleasure of the people of a town where he spends two or three months each year is not at all at work in the Herald office is, and just what he does, and he is quick to recognize good work. His quick reproof follows any negligence or bad work, but that he is not a hard taskmaster is shown by the fact that most of his men have been a long time in his service. The Herald often bears the impress of Mr. Bennett's idiosyncrasies, but no one can deny that on the > whether its influence has been extended or not. The revenue is the criterion of success in newspaper management, after all. It is another mistake to suppose that Mr. Bennett squanders his money. Though his income is already somewhere between $750,000 and $800,000 per year, he is regularly increasing it. His investment in the Newport Casino is an instance of his management. He advanced $100,000 on this property, doing at the same time an act which the people here praised him for, since it made the construction of this wonderful pleasure resort possible, and one which also paid him well, since he gets 6 per cent. interest on the money and has it well secured. Although he has immeuse establishments at London, Paris and Pau as well as at Newport, and maintains cach regardless of expense, he does not spend all his income. His condition, then, according to Mr. Micawber, must be happy.

However, I don't believe it is. If Mr. Bennett is happy, his face is a lie. He looks weary, worn, bored to death with the mere effect of enjoying himself. When I see a man apparently unhappy because he has $800,000 to dispose of annually, I feel that there is very little hope for him and a great deal for me. I feel that I am really better off than he is. But since Mr. Bennett is not happy, and I am, and since I am very benevolently disposed, I am perfectly willing to change places with him if he is desirous of doing so. He can take up my aimless, cheerful tramp through the world, living happily from hand to mouth, and I will install myself in Stone Villa and enter upon the miserable task of getting away with the millions. Won't he jump at the proposition!

A Brakeman's Lucky Find.

Picking Up $55,000' in a Car-Substantial Gratitude of the Owner, Colonel Bryson, of No. 5 Wall street, New York city, took the Summit special 7:45 Ulster & Delaware railroad train for Phonicia, at Kingston, N. Y., last Friday evening, and put up at the Tremper house Just before retiring he discovered that he here either do not believe the stories of procured a horse and wagon at Phonicia and followed the train as far as Dean's Corners where he overtook it. After the train had left Phonicia, Elmer Emmett, a brakeman, was walking through one of the coaches, and seeing a wallet lying on the floor picked it up. Imagine his feelings when, on opening it, he found $55,000 in government bonds and several hundred dollars in greenbacks contained in it. He said nothing to any one about it. When Colonel Bryson arrived at Dean's Corners he acquainted Conductor Herd-man with his loss, and together they searched through the train without avail. When they were about giving up the search, they met Emmett, and he asked them what they were searching for, when Colonel Bryson said $50,000. Emmett inquired how it had been lost, and on a correct description of the pocketbook by the owner, the purse was produced and given to the colonel. The latter gentleman was ex tremely grateful for the recovery. He gave Emmett $20, and told him to come to the Tremper house and he would nego-tiate with him as to the choice of a position as conductor on the Hudson River railroad or on a southern road; a lucrative position on any of his many Mississippi steamboats, or be associated in his Wall street office. Emmett is a trustworthy, intelligent and honest young man, and his good fortune is looked upon by his many friends as a deserving windfall.
