WALKS AROUND TOWN.

THE MARCH OF IMPROVEMENT. NEW BUILDINGS IN THE NORTHWEST.

Tobacco Warehouses and Dwelling Houses.

Handsome Improvements in a Literary Hall on the College Campus. We have frequently had occasion to no-tice how the spirit of local improvement manifests itself, especially in the north-western section of the city, and what vast strides in the way of extending the builtup portions of Lancaster are made in the Fifth and Ninth wards. For years this has been going on, especially on the Griel tract, now rendered so valuable by hun-dreds of houses erected upon it and the eligible sites laid off for many more. A couple of hours walk through that section shows that the tide of progress which has been felt in the old northwest ward for

In the southwestern part of the splendid grounds of Hon. Thos. E. Franklin's residence, formerly the Kramph estate, ground has been broken for a fine residence for J. W. B. Bausman, esq., son-in-law of Mr. Franklin. On the southwestern corner of Charlotte and Chestnut streets is a most eligible and beautifully situated vacant lot, the property of the late John S. Gable, deed., will now doubtless come into market soon, and ere long be the location of a handsome residence, with which it deserves to be be adorned. A little further out the street, between the houses of Rev. John G. Fritchey and Mr. John Musselman, a Mr. Hertzler, of Elizabethtown, is building a spacious two-story house with mansard roof and bay window. On out the street, beyond the long rows of three-story houses of recent erection and all now occupied, Mr. Jacob Griel is now building fourteen fine three-story houses with all the modern improvements. At the corner of Walnut street and Lancaster avenue, and in a rapidly improving neighborhood, Mr. B. B. Martin has under way six two-story houses, and further out Walnut street Mr. Griel is building eleven new two-story brick houses, which can be sold or rented at prices to suit mechanics and men of moderate means. On Mary street, between Lemon and James, Was. Kahl is about follow-citizens, patrons of the humanities completing the foundation walls of six new brick houses. From his own excava tions and the general dumpage of the city, carts running thither from all direc-tion, Mr. Griel is having the low lots be-tween Walnut and Lemon, and west of Charlotte, rapidly filled up. The solid dirt is hauled upon that part where, perhaps, as early as next year, Mr. Grielwhose operations are directed by his energetic son and business manager, John F. Griel-may excavate the cellars for another row of houses, to be added to the many which have already made him one of our most extensive builders. On Mary street, now opened and graded through from James to the Harrisburg turnpike Handsome Improvements. No set of buildings in the northwestern portion of the city occupy such a commanding position, nor such extensive grounds as those of Franklin and Marshall college and the Reformed theological seminary. Despite the intensely dry weather, the campus grass and shrubbery look well, and the house is being set in order for the opening of the institution next week. The tints are subdued and harmonious and the whole effect striking and beauti-ful, especially the imitation of open work in the ceiling. On the side walls, where formerly were figures of classic subjects in niches, bare-legged orators, historians and muses in ill-fitting togas, there are now frescoed bust portraits of Americans of a literary character suitable for the place. On the north wall are Ffanklin, Marshall and Longfellow; on the south wall Webster Agassiz, Irving—representing our development in the philosophy of common sense, law, poetry, oratory, science and literature. After Many Days.

An Esthetic Romance of Revenge. A young girl leaned idly against the richly carved staircase of a mansion on Warburton avenue, Yonkers, and gazed languidly into the brilliantly lighted parlor in which groups of those on whose cheeks the brilliant flush of health was glowing, glided gracefully through the igures of a waltz. Trisstissima Vere was an only child. As her name indicated, a great sorrow was connected with the entrance into a cold, cruel world of this red-lipped beauty, whose nineteenth birthday was being celebrated by the merry throngs to whom allusion has been made. On the night of her birth the young father, who had looked forward with such tender joy to this crowning point in his life, had started out hurriedly for the doctor and had fallen into a coal hole. The nurse said it was a bad omen. When Mr. Vere sued the city for $25,000 damages and got a verdict for six cents, he remembered this. Turning sadly away from the court house, an old gray gipsy woman stopped him.

"" Do you know me, W. H. Vere?" she hissed in a low voice, her face lighting up with a maglignant look.
"No, woman; what would'st thou with

"Forty-seven years ago," muttered the old crone hoarsely, "your dead and gone father put ipecac in some melons that were growing in the back yard of the Vere mausion. The next day our entire family threw up everything they possessed. I was only a little girl then, but I remember the cold, pitiless smile on the face of your haughty father as he rode by our humble cot, and saw my youngest brother going to the drug store for something to settle his stomach, and swore to be revenged. I have kept my oath. My son was in the jury that tried your case, and his vote defeated you. But do not think my anger is sated. The O'Rourkes never forgive. Ere another sun shall have risen a deep sorrow will fall on your house. Remember the gipsy's warning and tremble." And with these words the toothless virago stepped silently around the corner and was lost to sight.

The night the celebration of Trisstissima's nineteenth birthday took place, and in the excitement of the event W. H. Vere thought of nothing but how to make his guests happy. About 11 o'clock the but-ler approached his mistress and whispered a few words in her ear. A frightened look passed over her face, and hastily seating herself on a fauteuil she sent a serv summon her husband. He came. "Bill," she said hoarsely, "some one has stolen the ice cream.'

"God help us!" ejaculated the grief-stricken man, "Why did I not heed the gipsy's warning?'
The party was a failure, and the haughty pride of the Vere family was humbled.

Paris Green in a Spring. A diabolical attempt was made recently by some persons to poison several families using water from a spring in Standford, N. Y. Jo Standford, of that town, while passing the spring stopped to examine its condition, and was surprised to find upon its quicksand bottom patches of green substance. He took for chemical analysis a portion of the deposit, which proved to be paris green, and it is now certain that a large number of people have been ex posed to death by poisoning. A meeting of the citizens of Standford was held to take action in the matter, and every effort will be made to discover the guilty persons. A reward of $400 offered for the detection and conviction of the criminals.
