FRIDAY EVENING, SEPT. 16, 1881.

The Reformed Pig. Unlike the proverbial dog, the pig has never had his day. Far-sighted people who have noticed the tendency among historians to rehabilitate the ruffians of antiquity have long been of the opin-ion that the day of justice to the pig would finally dawn. When we consider that Henry VIII. and Tiberius have been cleaned and exhibited to the public as men of irreproachable morals, it is clear that the hitherto dirty and despised pig ought to receive the attention of some skilful cleaner and restorer. Accordingly, we need not be surprised that an Englishman-Mr. Gilbert by name-has just written a monograph on the pig which will do much toward restoring that animal to his proper place in society.

If Mr. Gilbert is to be believed, the pig has been treated with shocking injustice. We have made him dirty and loathsome, and we have then abused him because he is what we have made him. Everybody has noticed the difference between new and old pigs. The former are white clean, and decidedly pretty, while the latter are as objectionable as Russian Socialists. Ought we not to ask ourselves if we are in any way responsible for the transforma-tion of the delicate new pig into the re-volting middle-aged pig? To this question Mr. Gilbert has an answer ready, and that answer is far from flattering to us.

In point of pig Mr. Gilbert is an un-doubted pelagian. He holds that the pig at birth is physically and morally pure, and that the faults and mud which he afterwards exhibits are due to the circumstances in which he is placed. These circumstances are to the last degree demoralizing. Men assume that mud is essential to the comfort of the pig, and so take pains to provide him with mud-puddles. They have the extraordinary theory that the pig thrives only upon filthy food, and so they feed him with refuse with which they would scorn to insult any other animal. They are confident that the dirtier the pigpen may be the happier the pig will be-come, and they bend their energies to building and furnishing pig-pens which shall be dirtier than the steerage of an oldfashioned emigrant ship. We need not wonder that the unhappy pig yields to the force of circumstances and becomes the loathsome beast that he undoubtedly is. Mr. Gilbert, as the apologist and defender of pigs, asserts that we ought to adopt an entirely new system of pig-cul-are. He would have the pig-pen built after a design so truly artistic that the daily contemplation of it could not but refine and elevate the pig's taste. The interior of this pig-pen should, according to Mr. Gilbert, be kept as scrupulously clean as a spare bedroom of a New England cottage. The pig should have a clean and comfortable bed—say a spring mattress-and his table dishes should be washed after every meal. While wallowing in every form should be sternly discountenanced, the pig should have a daily bath, and great care should be taken to protect him from insects. Finally, the pig's food should be of the daintiest description, and as the result of this treatment he would never lose the neatness and grace which Having thus transformed the pig by changing his surroundings, Mr. Gilbert would make him the familiar friend of man. That the pig has a good deal of intellect there can be no question, for there have been educated pigs who have shown an ability to work out mathematical problems and to play abstruse games of cards which has challenged the admiration of mankind. Mr. Gilbert maintains that the pig is an affectionate and faithful animal, and that as soon as he is taken by the foot and assisted to abandon the bad habits which have hitherto been his reproach, he can be made to take the place in the household now occupied by the dog and the cat. With prophetic and enthusiastic eye, Mr. Gilbert sees the reformed pig of the future sitting up on end on the hearthway, and licking his bristles with the assiduity of the daintiest cat. He sees the same animal lying in the lap of beauty, and accepting caresses with a far greater show of appreciation than is ever made by the pampered und conceited lap-dog. To the scientific person the domesticated pig will be of great service in doing mathematical sums, and to the sportsman be will be invaluable. The full-grown pig is larger and stronger than the fiercest dog, and as he has four times as much surface of nose as has the ablest hound, he would probably prove to be keen of scent as well as bold and vigorous in attack. Thus he would fully take the place of every variety of dog, and if he can be taught to kill mice, which is by no meaus improbable, he would leave no sphere of usefulness for the cat.

As for his voice, we may feel certain that it would be improved by cultivation. Just as he wallows in the mire, not from any love of mud, but in order to rid himself of annoying insects, so he sings in a coarse an l unmusical voice, not because he is devoid of musical taste, but because bad food and damp pens have in-jured his throat. Mr. Gilbert's system of treatment would, it is expected, convert the grunt that now offends our ears into a soft, musical purr, rather louder than the purr of a cat, but much rounder and softer in timbre. Thus the very last ground for finding fault with the pig as an inmate of the drawing room and the companion of men and women would vanish, and we should become so fond of the dear beast that we should never dream of eating him, thus arriving, though by an entirely different path, to that total abstinence from swine's flesh which Moses commanded, and which must forever assure to the great law giver the respect and gratitude of men of civilized

Cats.

Stories Told by the Poet Suinburne. Mr. Swinburne writes to the Spectator Having just read with delight and edification your account of "Martin," in your issue of to-day-an account worthy of a place in that most charming of all books ever dedicated by a great writer to the honor and glory of beloved animals, the "Menagerie Intime" of Theophile Gautier -I send you two stories, as they were told in my boyhood, of cats connected with my own family-in which, I may add, cat worship has been for years a hereditary legacy. One, when its master was lying wounded well nigh to death, watched for many days and nights at the door of his room; would not be lured or driven away, till at last it was possible for the convalescent to receive his faithful and in consolable friend, whose ecstacy may-or rather may not—be imagined. So much for the charge of personal indifference brought against cats by those who prefer whom they recognize a true reciprocal at traction-an unmistakable innate affinity My second story illustrates only that attachment to places which is more com-monly recognized as a feline property, but illustrates it in so singular a degree, that it may, perhaps, be thought worthy of this passing record. A favorite cat—I know not whether the same as the heroine ing record. A favorite catof the story just given-was conveyed to London from a country house in the depth of Northumberland, and missed immedi-ately after arrival. About a week after-affection which cats with the instinct so wards it arrived at its old home, half starved, and wholly fallen from its high estate as a cat of quality and distinction, but recognizable by the household left in charge, having smelt or inquired its way back on foot along a course of some three hundred miles, which it had just before traversed in a carriage for the first time.

The Law of Kindness;

Is universal: it affects all the human family, all animals, and may be even found in patent medicines. Some are drastic, and the patient is obliged to suffer pains worse than the disease; but in cases of obstinate constipation, dyspepsia, there is no remedy so kind, so gentle in its effects, and yet so satisfactory as Burdock Blood Bitters. A Sure Cure for Piles. Do you know what it is to suffer with Piles?
If you do, you know what is one of the worst torments of the human frame. The most perfect cure ever known is Kidney-Wort. It cures constipation, and then its tonic action restores health to the diseased bowels and prevents recurrence of disease. Try it without delay. Brandy as a Medicine. The following article was voluntarily sent to Mr. II. E. Slaymaker, Agent for Reigart's Old Wine Store, by a prominent practising physician of this county, who has extensively used the Brandy referred to in his regular practice. It is commended to the attention of those afficient with Indigestion and Dyspepsia.

BRANDY AS A MEDICINE. This now much abused Alcoholic Stimulam was never intended as a beverage, but to be used as a medicine of great potency in the cure of some of the destructive diseases which sweep away their annual thousands of victims. With a purely philanthropic motive we present to the favorable notice of invalids—especially those afflicted with that miserable disease December which is ease Dyspepsia, a specific remedy, which i nothing more or less than Brandy. The aged, with feeble appetite and more or less debility, will find this simple medicine, when used properly,

A Sovereign Remedy or all their fils and aches. Be it, however strictly understood that we prescribe and use but one article, and that is REIGART'S OLD BRANDY, Sold by our enterprising young friend, II E SLAYMAKER. This Brandy has stood the SLAYMAKER. This Brandy has stood the test for years, and has never failed, as far as our experience extends, and we therefore give it the preference over all other Brandies no matter with how many jaw-breaking French titles they are branded. One-fourth of the money that is yearly thrown away on various impotent dyspepsia specifics would suffice to buy all the Brandy to cure any such case or ascs. In proof of the curative newers of Reigart's Old Brandy.

In cases of Dyspepsia, we can summon numbers of witnesses—one case in particular we cite:—
A hard-working farmer had been afflicted with an exhaustive Dyspepsia for a number of years; his stomach would reject almost every kind of food; he had sour eructations constantly—uo appetite—in fact, he was obliged to restrict his diet to crackers and stale bread, and as a beverage he used McGrann's Root Beer. He is a Methodist, and then, as now preached at times, and in his discourses often declaimed earnestly against all kinds of strong drink. When advised to try Reigart's Old Brandy,

In his case, he looked up with astonishment, but after hearing of its wonderful effects in the cases of some of his near acquaintances, he at last consented to follow our advice. He used the Brandy faithfully and steadily; the first bottle giving him an appetite, and before the second was taken he was a sound man, with a stomach capable of digesting anything which hechose to eat. He still keeps it and uses a little occasionally; and since he has this nedicine he has been of very little pecuniary benecine he has been of very little pecuniary be fit to the doctor.—A Practising Physician.
