FRIDAY EVENING, SEPT. 23, 1881.

AN ODE. For the Yorktown Centennial. BY PAUL M. HAYNE, OF GEORGIA.

Mark, hark! down the century's long reaching slope To transports of triumph, those raptures of hope, The voices of main and mountain combined In glad resonance borne on the wings of the wind.

Oh sturborn the strife ere the conflict was won And the wild whirling war wreck half stifled the sun, The thunders of cannon that boomed on the sea, But we heard far thunders pealed up from the sea.

Where, guarding his sea life, a knight on the waves, Bold he turned kept at bay the bluff bull-dogs of graves, The day turned to darkness the night turned to fire, Still more fierce waxed the combat, more deadly the ire.

Undimmed by the gloom, in majestic advance, Oh behold where they ride o'er the red battle tide, Those banners united in love as in fame, The brave standard which drew from the star beams their flame.

And type of all chivalry, glory, romance, The fair hills, the luminous hills of France. No respite, no pause; by the York's tortured blood, The gray Lion of England is writing in blood.

Corwall's my castle and coast, Dartmouth's my bay, As he sharpens his broadsword and buckles his spur, "This battle, which so often has reaped rebels like him, Shall now harvest for death the rule yeomen again."

Vain boast; for ere sunset he's flying in fear, With the rebels he scouted close, close in his rear. The French on his flank hurt such volleys of shot, That e'en Gloucester's rebulet must be growing too hot.

Thus wedded in love, as united in fame, Lo! the standard which stole from the star light its name, And type of all chivalry, glory, romance, The fair hills, the luminous hills of France.

Our fathers' God, who on these plains Of old gave victory to our hand, This day to gracious favor deigns To bless the labor of our hand.
