No Such Store.

If there is any such store as Oak Hall in either England or France I could not find it. The nearest approach to it is "La Belle Jardiniere" Paris on the Seine, but any one visiting this store will say Oak Hall does better in quantity to select from, style and make-up of goods, though the prices in the main are cheaper in Paris; because of the cloths without duties, and the cheap labor of France. The people here, however, think our prices are quite low enough, considering all things. American Clothing outranks all other throughout the world for real gracefulness. We have here none of the narrow-breasted and contracted shouldered coats that are so universal abroad. Some of the New York Tailors who have opened branches in Paris are among the most popular artist-tailors there, and are well patronized.

The English and French open their eyes wide when told of the size of the Oak Hall Clothing House and its vast stock of ready goods for Men and Boys.

It is our purpose and hope always to have Philadelphia lead the retail clothing trade and we are giving our best efforts to improve every year on our cutting, patterns and workmanship. The character of materials we use is no longer an uncertain question. The people know that we are to be depended on for sound judgment (based on experience) in the goods selected. This year our fashions and finishing would warrant higher rates, but our prices are as reasonable as ever.

DISTEMPERED TROOPS.

TURBULENT SCENES AMONG MEN WHO REPRESENTED THE STATE AT YORKTOWN.

How a Youthful Guard Maintained His Post Against a Squad of Foragers.

Philadelphia Times

Statesmen from the rural districts, "toting" dusty luggage, begrimed and sad-eyed, hurried through the city yesterday morning for the "out-going train" as a night train. Troops, bestraggled and bearing the evidence of a hard siege, marched across the city to the depots to embark for their homes in the interior. The statesmen were the members of the legislative committee that attended the Yorktown celebration and the militia was the escort sent down to represent the state in the great demonstration. The steamer Galathea, which carried the party and had from the scene, arrived at the old navy wharf at nine o'clock. Governor Hoyt and his associates residing at the state capital taking carriages from the wharf to the cars. Several members of the legislative committee lingered awhile in the city to have the dust beaten out of their clothes and submit their countenances to the keen edged razor before returning to the bosoms of their families, and between these operations several of them unpacked their baggage of grievances and growled gloomily about the way they had been treated during the trip. There were about 75 members of the state militia aboard the Galathea, beside the committee and the invited guests. As the vessel was being unladen, Henry Clay cigars and other champagne in quantities sufficient to disorganize the best regulated liver and cause throbbings in the head of a wooden Indian. In fact, they charged that while the brave and bold infantrymen were munching hard-tack and salted meats the legislative gods were invited dyspepsia, indigestion and bilious attacks in forays upon spring chicken, salads, cocktails and biscuits. In the words of one of the disgruntled ones, "they went for a big drunk and took the troops along for ballast."

Major Ryan of the state militia, whom a reporter called upon to ascertain how his command had fared, remarked, in answer to a question: "We had a pleasant time and I have not heard of any complaint from my men about bad treatment. The fact is, I had a most comfortable boat was not large enough to accommodate the men, and Pennsylvania did not make the show she should have done at such a demonstration. This was due, of course, to the lack of funds. The camp at Yorktown was delightfully dusty, and our quarters were not very comfortable, as those provided for the troops of other states. The saddest thing in my mind was the meagre accommodations provided for Governor Hoyt. He should have had a suitable headquarters to entertain those upon him, such as were provided for the executives of New Jersey and some Southern states. Food was provided in abundance for the corps. Colonel Thomas J. Smith was the commissary, and I want to say for him that he left nothing to be desired in the way of provender. The rations consisted of the best hams, good potatoes, hard tack, fresh eggs and excellent coffee. A quantity of fresh meats and chickens and bread were put aboard for the committee, but the meats and chickens were unfit to be eaten and the bread soon became moldy. The committee fared no better than the troops."

A young militiaman, who had shouted himself nearly hoarse during the trip up, vouchsafed what he was pleased to call a "straight racket" concerning the complaints of the country members and the "plow shear" soldiers: "You see," proceeded this juvenile follower of Mars and patron of Bacchus, "these country legislators began by inviting squads of the men from their districts into the private quarters of the committee, and an ordinary soldier from the interior can put under his belt as much provender as can be stuffed into a Jersey carpet-bag. The members of the committee soon saw that such forays, if permitted, would soon lessen their ardor in the contest of power. Mrs. Hubbard's, and they shut down on the proceedings. Of course, that was humiliating to the statesmen from the country, who evidently wanted to stand well in the eyes of the boys. Then they began to grope and the troops were not long in taking up the burden of their song, which was that the committee were swimming in wine and feeding like lords, while the soldiers were short of rations. That was all bosh, but, bosh or no bosh, they finally decided to break into the quarters of the committee and would have executed the threat but for the action of the officers. As it was, they took possession of the boat and raised merry Cain down and up. The fact is," said the young man, "the men of the Fourteenth and Eighteenth regiments, through the fault of their officers, were not provided with two days' rations before starting as they were ordered, and they got wild from the start. But, understanding this, we had more than we needed. Why, before leaving Yorktown we gave a whole barrel of bully potatoes to an aged old darkey, who, after a long look at the gift, remarked: 'Gel'men, dar's more fodder in dat ar bar' an' dis old cullud pussen has eat since de war. Bress my soul, chil'nen I'm 'bleeged to ye.' So forays on the committee were numerous and so disastrous that it became necessary to place a guard at the door. It fell to the lot of a State Fencible boy—one of the ponies as they are called because of their size—to guard this portal of the law-maker at a time when the troops from up the state seemed most bent on mischief."

"While this youngster, with gun in hand, was standing at his post, a party of six Pittsburgh men, headed by a strapping fellow, walked boldly up to the door. With a supercilious leer the six-footer remarked to the little Fencible: 'Stand aside, kid; this party wants something to eat.' 'You cannot pass that door,' said the young soldier. 'We can't, hey?' answered the ringleader. 'Follows,' he added, turning to his friends, 'that job says we can't go in here.' This speech, spoken in irony, created a laugh, but the young trooper, drawing up his musket, answered with great earnestness: 'Gentlemen, my orders have been to allow no one to enter this room. I will obey that order.' 'Well,—your orders, I'm going in.' With these words the leader of the party advanced to the door and intruded his foot beyond the sill. The youthful trooper, with fire in his eye, brought his musket to a charge and turning to his opponent said, in measured words: 'If you enter that room I'll kill you.'

'You will, will you,' sneeringly answered the man from a Smoky City.

'I will, so help me God.'

'The layonet for a moment, poised by an iron grasp, glittered under the chin of the subordinate, who, with a curse and a threat to be revenged, turned on his heel and, followed by his friends, returned to his quarters.'

As the steamer neared Philadelphia the men stocked on the decks and shouting and passing vessels. To give the lie to their charges of insufficient food they showered hard-tack, potatoes and eggs at the passing vessel. The fact that the governor was aboard had no restraining influence, and they 'jiggered' and howled like so many demons if all reports are true. Their indignation at Senator Smith was vented in a series of 'groans,' while they lacerated the bosoms of the stewards aboard by cheering for candidate Wolfe in thunder tones. When the Galathea was tied to her dock a little battle took place between the men who first gained the wharf and those on the decks. The missiles were hard-tack and potatoes, and eggs, and then, as the raised bread and vegetables, and then, as remarked an officer yesterday, 'the starved out, weary and forlorn men proceeded home.'

Won at Last.

'So you wish to marry my daughter?' These words were uttered by a man who fairly hissed them through his teeth as he stood, with a cruel sneer on his lips, in front of a young man, the nervous twitches of whose clear-cut features told more plainly of a long and weary, howsoever interspersed with adjectives, the torture he was suffering.

'Yes, sir,' said Herbert McIntosh, looking up into the face of him who had spoken. 'I love Myrtle with a rich, warm, tempestuous love that reaches to the very core of my being, and I would gladly avow the difference in social position that exists between us. My passion is a deathless one, that, like the mighty simoon of the desert, gathers force with every instant of its existence, and stills alike with its hot breath the life of man and beast. I know that appearances are against me. I am poor and honest, and last Saturday night I had a king-fall beaten at the Owl club, but I cannot conceal my love. You are rich and successful, and I can see from the window of my little room in which I work the high wall of your banking house, and hear the plaintive cry of the stricken pig who has his interior scooped out and is cut into hams and clear slices before the echo of his death shriek has ceased to linger in the musk-jaded air of the stock yards, or at one arising under turquoise-tinted skies, while I am in great luck to have a sky at all. It is not my fault that you are rich; I love your daughter, and she returns my love,' and, saying this, Herbert looked anxiously in the direction of the window, his breast giving a great throbb of joy as he saw that the blinds were closed, and the old man could not throw him out.

'Hark ye, my lad,' said the pork packer, while a cold, skating-smile hovered over his face. 'You say you love my daughter, and would win her for your bride. So be it. I have naught against thee save thy poverty. Come to me within a month with $1,000 gained by thine own industry and skill, and Myrtle shall be your wife. If you fail in this her hand is given to a friend of mine who owns a glue-factory.'

'But you would not force her to marry against her will?' said Herbert. She has pledged her troth to me.'

'I know not of your childish vagaries,' replied the old man. 'I have said my say. In three minutes I shall mutter the bulldozer.'

Herbert went away.

Midnight on Wabash avenue. Five men are seated around a table with a hole in the centre of it. Herbert is in the party, and opposite him sits his hated rival, the man who owns an interest in a glue-factory. Herbert looks at his cards and bets $100.

'Five hundred,' says the glue-factory man.

'A thousand,' says Herbert, reaching into his pocket as if for money.

'Oh, never mind getting out your roll until the hands are played,' said the glue-factory man. 'I will be easy with you, and only call. I have four aces.'

'Sixty-eight,' said Herbert, in low, bitter tones, as he laid the cards on the table, and pocketed a thousand dollar bill which his adversary threw across to him.

The next night Herbert and Myrtle occupied an chair in the parlor of the pork packer's residence. 'We will be married in the fall, my sweet,' she said, in soft, low tones, kissing him passionately as she spoke.

'Yes, Tootie,' he murmured; 'in the fall. We can live with your folks next winter.'

Who is 'Q. E. D.'?

The Rains of Cambodia—A Corrector Corrects.

Frank Vincent in New York Sun.

The Sea of the 9th Inst., contains a communication from Q. E. D. Lancaster, Pa., in which the writer questions the verity of the following sentence in the Sea of my book on the Rains of Cambodia:

'With the exception of an article published some years since in the Revue des Deux Mondes, Mr. Vincent's description is the first to acquaint the general reader with the magnitude, beauty and archeological importance of those Khmer or ancient Cambodian monuments.'

I beg to endorse the statement of your review as wholly accurate. 'The Land of the White Elephant'—over 100 pages of which, with a map, plan and twenty-two engravings, related my explorations in Cambodia—was originally published by Messrs. Sampson, Low & Co., of London, in December, 1873, and by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, of New York in March, 1874. Mr. Thomson's 'Malacca, Indo-China and China,' to which your correspondent refers as antedating my work, was published in London in November 1874 (not 1875), and republished in this city in February 1875. Thus I may fairly claim the honor of being 'the first to acquaint the general reader with the magnitude, beauty and archeological importance of the ancient Cambodian monuments,' and I am so by a priority of over eleven months in England and nearly twelve months in America. Were I to accept as true the information proffered by Q. E. D. that Mr. Thomson's book was published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers in 1870, instead of 1875, I should be compelled to extend my precedence of publication in New York to five years! But I rest content with being a year beforehand.

The latest edition of my book brings the history of these remarkable architectural remains down to April, 1881—a date fully seven years more recent than that indicated by what your correspondent flatteringly styles the "very full description, with plans, measurements and reproductions of the original photographs and sketches," of Mr. Thomson. These, I find, including the text, two plans and six wood cuts, cover exactly 17 of the 546 pages of 'Malacca, Indo-China, and China.' More than two-thirds of this work, it should be added, are devoted to China and the Chinese, and of that country and people the English traveler has given us a vivacious and trustworthy description.

I request you to print this refutation of four errors, of which no one professing to correct ought to be capable of being guilty.

Searching for Treasure

It is believed that the schooner Mary D. Leech, chartered by the International Submarine company, which includes among its members Stephen Tasker, of the firm of Morris, Tasker & Co., and Charles F. Pike, also a Philadelphian, has a far different purpose from the one ostensibly pursued. There is a curious chain of circumstances to strengthen the belief that instead of searching for a cargo of pig-iron the schooner which is now cruising about the Delaware Breakwater, with divers and a splendidly-equipped wrecking apparatus aboard, is really seeking for the sunken treasure ships which are known to be in the bay. There are authentic records of the loss of two such vessels, one of them a British man-of-war named the Braak, which capsized near the close of the Revolutionary war, with a cargo of gold and silver said to amount to $25,000,000, and the other the Gloire, a French frigate, which ran aground about the year 1780 and from which gold to the amount of 1,200,000 livres was reported to have been thrown overboard to save it from the English fleet, which had chased the vessel past the Capes.

Many people afflicted with phthisis pulmonalis (Consumption) use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup with great benefit and relief. Price 5 cents a bottle.

DRESS CLOTHS AND CLOAKINGS.

Good judgment should be exercised in buying dress cloths, for when well bought they make a most desirable and very serviceable suit or dress—something that can be worn almost at all times of the year by a lady or young miss.

Our cloths are manufactured on special orders expressly for us, and are prepared with great care with reference to quality, colors and finish. Some are shrank, and when they have not been we have them steam-shrunk, at the option of the purchaser.

We have these Cloths in low and medium prices. Also of the finest qualities of Imported Fabrics.

CLACKS.—We have hundreds of new styles, in lots that the piles reach our ceilings. Dry goods buyers and cloak manufacturers are requested to make their presence known at the office, and trade prices will be named for quantities.

SEAL SKIN CLOVES AND PLUSHES.

The most beautiful and handsomest cloths this season for a Lady's Coat, Dolman or Mantle, are the SEAL SKIN CLOTHS. The finest qualities cost high, but when the fact is considered that they require no expensive trimmings, the total cost of the garment is very little more than an ordinary Beaver, and yet they are less expensive and more durable than any other fabric worn for a lady's outside garment, or for trimmings. These goods never crease or press as the silk plushes do. Prices range from $3 per yard (5 inches wide) up to the finest qualities imported. For

FALL SACQUES, WRAPS AND MANTLES

We have the New Green Checks, Tan Checks, Blue and Green Checks, Blue, Green and Cardinal Small Plaids, Broken Plaids and Checks for Ladies' and Children's Coats, all with fancy backs.

Our Flannels were all bought before the recent advance, and we are giving our customers the benefit of our early large purchases. BOYS' AND MEN'S CASSIMERES.

Our Cassimere Department was never in better shape, stock, assortment and sales all large and increasing. This is where you will find the latest styles, low—some very, and the latest styles, but all good, strong, durable fabrics, such as the boys wear for school, in play suits, and men want for working pants and suits.
