WANAMAKER & BROWN.

No Such Store.

If there is any such store as Oak Hall in either England or France I could not find it. The nearest approach to it is "La Belle Jardiniere" Paris on the Seine, but any one visiting this store will say Oak Hall does better in quantity to select from, style and make-up of goods, though the prices in the main are cheaper in Paris; because of the cloths without duties, and the cheap labor of France. The people here, however, think our prices are quite low enough, considering all things. American Clothing outranks all other throughout the world for real gracefulness. We have here none of the narrow-breasted and contracted shouldered coats that are so universal abroad. Some of the New York Tailors who have opened branches in Paris are among the most popular artist-tradesmen there, and are well patronized.

The English and French open their eyes wide when told of the size of the Oak Hall Clothing House and its vast stock of ready goods for Men and Boys.

It is our purpose and hope always to have Philadelphia lead the retail clothing trade and we are giving our best efforts to improve every year on our cutting, patterns and workmanship. The character of materials we use is no longer an uncertain question. The people know that we are to be depended on for sound judgment (based on experienced) in the goods selected. This year our fashions and finishing would warrant higher rates, but our prices are as reasonable as ever. Signed,

THE YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL VIEWED BY "DRUMORE."

Bown the Bay—On Historic Ground—The Celebration in Old Virginia. Special Correspondence of the Intelligences Your correspondent got the idea into his head that he would go down to Yorktown, helping hand to the centennial celebraof the English forces under Lord Cornwallis to our Washington. The comings of ideas to the above mentioned head are excepted on account of their greatness. "like angels' visits," and soon as the owner of the head finds one has taken possession, he pays every, attention to it and follows in the evening of Monday, the 17th inst., and steamed and splashed down the beauthe broad wake of the vessel; he saw

"The darkness Fa'l from the wing of night," and enclose the vessel, hiding the shores, and resting on the water. When he saw foes and almost breathed with him-

" My native land-Good night !" But he soon changed his mind about it, and concluded he would not personate the Childe in a good night apostrophe, and be sides lacked a listening "little page" to whom he could talk misanthropy. The ride down the bay and the night on the boat, while very prolific in entertainment and fun, and extremely barren in comfort to your scribe, would not be of much general interest, so passing on the next morning finds him landing at one of the wharves in the splendid harbor of old, historic Yorktown, one of the most insignificant, sleepy villages in the Union, al though right there is where Liberty called a halt to Tyranny; where the crisis of de-feat and demoralization came to old England's haughty host, and a new era of freedom and hope burst over America; and, like the guiding star "came and stood over" our patriots and their warmhearted friends, while the angels of war transformed to angels of peace, twined our language with the little of Peace, twined our laurels with the lilies of France.

And what did your correspondent see ? Why, a great dusty common containing hundreds of acres with soldiers, tents, men, women, children and niggers, and beer saloons and gaming apparatus, cating, drinking and smoking shanties scattered all over it. Anything that looks like a wagons, may be centennial relies, drawn by old bony horses, with no harness but collars, traces and a back-band guided by knotted-up rope reins, the latter held and guided by an old negro, who would be out of place entirely if you could see him any other place in the world than along with that turn-out. On this occasion you would see his wagon loaded with brave boys dressed in blue their feet sticking out in every direction, shouting to their pedes-trian companions and the negro weaches, and urging their autiquated teamster to move on, whereupon he shouts, "Glep!" and slashes his gad on the old horses, hav-ing the only effect of making them kick

They have another mode of conveyance that attracts the attention, it being a miserable little steer or a miserable big calf, so poor that a buzzard wouldn't think of stopping on it were the calf to die. This calf is hitched by a yoke with a single bow to a kind of two-wheeled concern, with a top; leave the bed be in danger of falling to picces, set a little nigger, ragged and you have a harmonious picture that will years led two or three other of most active CLOTHING, &c. make you smile in spite of yourself, as you see it moving along in the sacred dust of old Virginia. And as you see the male and female negroes of Virginia, observe their appearance, motions and talk, note the seemingly option absence of intelligence.

After the sun go down, throwing back coquet the stone was laid the governor of Virtish sparkles on the white caps of the ginia delivered an address of welcome, waves, and scintillating in the foam of hospitable, cloquent and fine in its effect. The programme contemplated having the distinguished guests from France and Germany present during the speaking, but the fleet that bore them did not sail up the river till the exercises were far advanced. all this, partly with his mind's eye, he felt almost as if he were another Childe Harold sailing away from his friends and played both the French and the American flags, the latter of which was lowered as anchor was east, and a salute of thir-teen guns fired, which was returned from one of our men of-war, a band in an American vessel playing the Marseillaise, and the French again hoisted the star spangled banner to the mast head, and hung out a number of smaller French, American and German flags.

Tuesday evening the scene in the harbor was magnificent. All the vessels were decorated with red, white and blue light, hundreds of them on each vessel from the mast tips almost to the water's edge, arranged in most tasteful and varied manners. They stood out in the dense dark ness of the night with beautiful effect, looking, as your scribe's friend and traveling companion said, "like immense Christmas trees covered with tapers." About eight o'clock several of the vessels began sending up rockets that added greatly to quarter could be heard gaily playing, while such airs as "Columbia," "Star Spangled Banner," and "Yankee Doc-dle" predominated in the performances.

It was a grand illumination, the lights being reflected in the water, and caught up and flung back and forth, the rockets' long tails of fire in the air, where they burst horse, mule or ox they harness up and drive at Yorktown. There you see old in the cloudy darkness of the night, hissother, showering sparks by the millions, and below the deep, dark, waving river a magnifying mirror, that divided every ray of light into a dozen and concentrated the beauty of a dozen into each one-it was a sight a witness can never forget.

There were hundreds of interesting things about which columns might be written with time and space, of which there is a scarcity at present. Altogether it was a most enjoyable trip, with a few vexations and inconveniences resultant from limited accommodations in the town, of course, but well worth the time and money invested. And besides, your correspondent thinks he is a much better citizen since his pilgrimage and the devotions he paid at Liberty's shrine.

The cemetery is nicely enclosed with a new brick wall, and everything about it is kept in the very best order, and we need not be ashamed to have such a spot called a national cemetery, granted we were not ashamed to make it. The grass is nicely trimmed and green, and where should the grass grow greener and the dew fall lighter than above the nameless graves of a nation's martyred dead. It is a beautiful, sad place, and one where a soldier ful, sad place, and one where a soldier in the minority. If we are not misinformed. Mr. Jordan is of rather high church proclivities, and we have heard it suggested that the re-ordination may have been of his choice, and not the bishop's. But, even so, we have always understood that there was considerable less question attaching to their retainers, and officers of the army and navy, and all others deserving to be excepted on account of their greatness.
