The Season's Hunting. Plentifulness of Wild Game in the Norther

Deer and bear hunters in the Penusylvania and adjoining New York woods had unusually fine sport this fall. A party from Newburg camped last week in the neighborhood of Black Lake, Sullivan county. They took away three deer and a bear, besides 140 partridges. They claim to have started forty deer, and that the bear they killed was only one of a dozen they saw. One day last week a local hunter, Ira Milspaugh, was treed by a bear near Mongaup, Sullivan county. He frightened the bear away by his terrific yells for help.

The New York sportsmen, Eddy and McGowan, spent two days deer-hunting near Milford, Pa., recently. The first day out a big doe was driven within twenty yards of where McGowan was standing, in plain sight. McGowan didn't shoot, but shouted to Sheriff Ridgway, who was in another part of the grounds, that one of the biggest heifer calves he'd ever seen had just run by him. That was the same day that Jake Schorr, of Milford, one of the party, fell asleep on the runway, and when he woke up and saw a big buck standing over him chewing a white hat he wore, broke for the road as fast as he could go. The party brought in one fine deer, however, but no one knew who killed it. A fine young buck was killed within sight of Lackawaxen station, on Erie, Pike county, last week. Sheriff Joe Atkinson, of Wayne county, a famous hunter, has had time to take only one day's hunt this season. He spent the day in Paupack region, Pike county, and killed two deer. He says there are more bears in the backwoods of that county than have been known for years.

Hugh Jordan, of Kettle Creck, Potter county, Pa., is one of the greatest hunters bear-hunting and trapping. He has captured twenty-nine bears in that region this season. His last capture was a bear that weighed 500 pounds. The hide alone weighed fifty. The bear measured twelve inches between the eyes. It was the largest animal of the kind ever killed in the county. Potter is the only county in Pennsylvania where there is not a single mile of railroad. The Erie runs within a few miles of the northern border—Wellswile, Allegheny county, N. Y., being the nearest railroad station. The county is more than one half wilderness. Until recently its forests were frequented only by hucters and bark peelers. Recently "wild-cat" oil operators, prospecting for petroleum, have flocked to its mountains, and the backwoods natives are fearful that oil may be discovered and their favorite hunting grounds destroyed. The fact that wild a bear the region this capture with 100 per to 100 per in northern Pennsylvania. He prefers may be discovered and their favorite hunting grounds destroyed. The fact that wild land would increase in value from $3 an acre to $200 an acre if oil should be found is nothing when weighed against the probability that the deer and bears will be driven away.
