At a matinee ball at the Germania Mannerhall, Baltimore, Charles Miller shot dead his wife, and, in order to amuse his wife and children, fired off a lot of shooting crackers. Not satisfied with this, he procured a pound of powder and put it into three ale bottles and fastened them up tightly. After he had inserted a fuse into each bottle he attempted to fire them off in the yard. He was unsuccessful in this attempt, and taking the bottles into the house set them upon a table at which his wife and a little girl named Jerry were sitting. Mrs. Miller wished to fire off a shooting cracker, and in order to get light removed the chimney from a coal oil lamp which stood on the table. The cracker went off and caused the lamp to explode. The burning oil was communicated to the powder in the bottles and all three went off with terrific effect, scattering glass all over the room. The oil set fire to the house and to the clothing of Mr. and Mrs. McClelland and Miss Berry. Mr. McClelland succeeded in extinguishing the fire, but, however, until he had been severely burned. His wife was also dangerously burned about the head and face, her clothing being burned from her body. Miss Berry was probably fatally injured by glass striking her in the side. She also received several other cuts and burns.
