A HAPPY NEW YEAR!
The season of 1881 closed one of the most brilliant and successful campaigns in the history of our trade. We congratulate our patrons and ourselves in anticipation of a lively and increasing Spring Trade.
In order to meet the demand we have made extensive purchases in our own and otherwise extended our facilities to arrive about our First or February. We will be able to release the most desirable as well as the general class of goods. A great desideratum among our people seems to be a cheap article in clothing. There is no good in it. We have tried it and found it doesn't pay. We will wear one of our $30 Overcoats will last three seasons' hard wear and look better, while a $20 Overcoat will hardly be recognized after one season's wear. Where is the economy in buying trash? Few persons are competent judges of fine articles of clothing come up in first-class style. Therefore, we invite special attention to our establishment, where can be found at all times the very best in the market, at prices as reasonable as can be expected. We are selling a few HEAVY-WEIGHT

OVERCOATINGS
—AND—SUITINGS,
at very low prices in order to close them out to make room for our new Spring Stock.
Familiar for the very liberal patronage, we hope to continue our motto of Square Dealing in all our transactions, and show a practical and happy result during our Spring Campaign.
All are cordially invited to call at 121 N. QUEEN STREET.

FRIDAY EVENING, JAN. 20, 1882.
THE RUSSIAN MINISTER
AND HIS VERY VULGAR WIFE.
A Shocking Story of Social Life in Washington.
A little over a year ago, when the Russian minister and his wife arrived in Washington, Mr. Bartholomew was admired for his magnificent proportions and dark, handsome face. His English wife did not make so agreeable an impression, as from the first she was voted "quer." She is a fat, red-faced woman, with sore eyes and red hair. It was not, however, her personal appearance so much as her obtrusive and innate vulgarities which gave rise to the gossip which was at first only whispered, but has been openly discussed since the return of the family to this city after a sojourn at Newport, during the summer. While house-hunting a year ago there was much talk about the minister and wife trying to buy a house near the city, and no one appeared anxious to have them for tenants. For many weeks after they rented a house on Connecticut avenue they lived there without furniture or servants. Visitors were never admitted to the domain, and the minister in servants whom they hired always left after a few days, and carried away some of the most awful secrets of the quite mysterious household. Not until last March, when the czar was assassinated and the funeral ceremonies were performed in the mansion, had outsiders an opportunity to see the inside of the house. The answer was always given to callers that madame was ill or not at home. One diplomatic dinner was given by the minister and his wife, and after a comfortable society was convulsed with laughter and disgusted at the details of that dinner leaked out. It is reported that the guests arrived and were shown into the dining room, where the table was set but no dishes were served. The minister and madame came in from the kitchen, her natural red face considerably incarnarinated by her exertions, and brought in a tureen of soup, which she ladled out and recommended to her guests in the following manner: "You must eat this soup. I know it is good for me, and I myself, and watched the cook to see that she did not spit in it. It is a Russian custom for the cook to spit in the soup." Other articles for the dinner were brought by the porters of the trades-people from whom they had been ordered, and the hostess in her most genial manner asked her guests to make themselves at home and assist her in tearing off the brown paper and putting the articles in the dishes. It was a real picnic dinner. The conversation was as refined as the banquet, for madame with the utmost frankness announced that it was quite the thing to be illegitimate; that her husband was illegitimate, and she was illegitimate, and she asked, "our children are illegitimate." Since that awful dinner the history of the Bartholomews has no secret. The diplomatic circle felt scandalized and the diplomacy of Secretary of State Blaine was taxed to the utmost how to obtain an indefinite leave of absence for Russia's representative. It is averred that Mr. Willamor, the first secretary of the legation, has remained in New York and refused to come to Washington until the Bartholomews left. Mr. Willamor is now chargé d'affaires, and the minister is now said to be a favorite of the late czar, who was not such a paragon of virtue as to be shocked at the immoralities of others, so that the liaison which existed between his favorite and the person who was not then his wife and who had for years been an obstacle to marriage died just as obligingly as did the unhappy wife of the late emperor, and the subject, like his master, went through the form of marriage with a Russian girl, who was appointed minister to Greece, but Queen Olga signified her disapproval in such strong terms that the Russian minister of foreign affairs had to withdraw the appointment and kindly sent the Bartholomews to the United States. The minister was alive with scandal concerning the minister and his wife. The coarseness and vulgarity of the madam so shocked the sense of propriety and modesty of the guests at the hotel where they boarded that the ladies made a complaint to the landlord and he had to request Mme. Bartholomew not to appear at dinner in such extremely décolleté dresses. Madame one day told a young lady she intended giving her a dinner at the Casino, and actually issued invitations. When the day arrived madame wrote that she could not obtain the room and servants that she wanted, and consequently recalled the invitations. About the 1st of December Mr. Bartholomew sold out his household effects in this city, and the family said they were to leave Washington immediately. Although there was no furniture in the house, the family continued to occupy the empty mansion, and not until the last evening of the year did Mr. Bartholomew call on the president to bid him farewell. Officially they have departed, but bodily they may still be seen here as they were a week ago. One of the "on dits" of the day is that the late Russian minister can out boast all other husbands. While some may point to the program and say I have only been married three years and have four children," he can say, "I have only been married one year and have had seven children." It is suggested when Russia sends us a minister it will be well to send the marriage certificate along with the other credentials.
It is a new thing for this country to have so much trouble with Russian friendship. In the days which are past and gone there was a strong bond of friendship between the United States and Russia. There never was a more popular minister in Washington than Baron Bodisco. He is still remembered, and the romance of his marriage with the beautiful Miss Williams, of Georgetown, is frequently revived by those who know the program and say I have only been married three years and have four children," he can say, "I have only been married one year and have had seven children." It is suggested when Russia sends us a minister it will be well to send the marriage certificate along with the other credentials.
A Fugitive Deer Making Sport.
In Millville, N. J., at about noon, while everybody in town was going to dinner, a deer came dashing down through the main street, and right behind it followed a dozen dogs barking the loudest they could. Every dog on the line of the chase joined in, so that when the edge of the town was reached there were nearly fifty dogs caught on to the procession before it left town, and he was soon followed by a score of others, and inside of half an hour there were only women and factory hands left in the town. The deer, however, got into the woods and escaped. Hunting parties were then organized and daily expeditions were made into the forest. If the deer had not been run down on Saturday it is doubtful whether any of the male population would have attended church on Sunday. The animal was cornered on the edge of a creek about two miles off. A hound, which an enthusiastic merchant sent to Philadelphia for on Thursday, brought the deer to bay and the merchant's son fired the fatal shot. It is not known where the deer came from, but some believe that it escaped from the Zoological Gardens in Philadelphia.

Lonely Lamps at Sea.
Lights that Ride the Waves in Violent Gales and Tossing Waters.
Providence Journal.
The illuminated buoy is a wonderful invention. Imagine an enormous lamp riding the waves. The buoy is a compact wrought-iron vessel, which serves as a receiver of compressed gas. The duration of the flame depends upon the size of the buoy. Some in use in Europe have been made to burn thirty days and some one hundred and twenty days. It is said that a buoy of sufficient size will contain gas enough to furnish the light for one year. During that time the flame is steady and constant night and day, requiring no attention whatever after once put in operation. The lantern attached to the buoy admits air enough to feed the flame, but not a particle of water can enter.
The most violent gales, the greatest force of the waves, submerging even beneath them, has no effect upon this light. It burns with undimmed brightness as long as gas is in its reservoir. The light, it is said, can be thrown six or seven miles in clear weather. Sooty deposits are not made on the glass of the lanterns, as has been demonstrated. The refilling of the buoy at certain intervals is performed by a tender and requires but a few minutes time. It is done by passing the gas from a store holder, which contains the gas compressed to ten atmospheres, by means of a flexible tube into the buoy to a pressure of six atmospheres.
How Mr. Sherman Worked his "Boom."
A colored man named Emerson, formerly a messenger in the treasury department, has been before the Senate contingent fund investigating committee, telling a story that cross examination failed to impair. He said briefly that while in the treasury in the spring of 1880 he was granted by Mr. Sherman sixty days' leave of absence, although he had not earned a day, and was sent to Arkansas to work for Sherman's delegation at the Chicago convention. While thus occupied he received full pay from the treasury department and expenses. He managed to be elected a member of the Arkansas delegation, but on arriving at Chicago overpowered influences assailed him and he changed his allegiance to Grant. Upon his return he at once left his place under Mr. Sherman. He testified also that he was the bearer or knower of a message from Mr. Sherman to Pinchback at New Orleans, offering Pinchback, if he would secure the Louisiana delegation for Sherman, the position of naval officer at the New Orleans custom house, but Pinchback declined the offer.

Is Death Dreadful?
Funeral Address by Robert G. Ingersoll.
In a remote corner of the Congressional cemetery, a small group of people with uncovered heads ranged around a newly opened grave. The Rev. Mr. DeLoach and Mrs. George O. Miller, and family and friends, who had gathered to witness the burial of the former's bright little son Harry. As the casket rested upon the stretcher there was a painful pause, broken only by the mother's sobs, until the undertaker advanced toward a stout, florid-complexioned gentleman in the party and whispered to him. This gentleman was Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, a friend of the Millers, who attended the funeral at their request. He shook his head when the undertaker first addressed him, and then said, suddenly: "Does Mr. Miller desire it?" The undertaker gave an affirmative nod. Mr. Miller looked appealingly toward the noted orator, and then hastily Colonel Ingersoll advanced to the side of the grave, made a motion denoting a desire for silence, and in a voice of exquisite cadence, delivered one of his characteristic eulogies for the dead. The scene was intensely dramatic. A fine drizzling rain was falling, and every head was bent and every ear turned to catch the impassioned words that fell from the lips of the speaker. Col. Ingersoll was unopposed by either hat or umbrella, and his invocation thrilled his hearers with awe, each eye that had previously been bedimmed with tears, brightening, and soba becoming hushed. Col. Ingersoll said:
"MY FRIENDS: I know how vain it is to gild a grief with words, and yet I wish to take from every grave his fear. Here in this world, where life and death are equal things, all should be brave enough to meet what all the dead have met. The future has been filled with fear, stained and polluted by the heartless past. From the woodruff tree of life the buds and blossoms fall with ripened fruit, and in the common bed of earth the patriarchs and babes sleep side by side.
"Why should we fear that which will come to all that is? We cannot tell, we do not know, which is the greater blessing, life or death. We cannot say that death is better, but we do know whether the grave is the end of this life or the door of another, or whether the night here is not somewhere else a dawn. Neither can we tell which is the more fortunate—the child dying in its mother's arms before its lips have learned to form a word, or he who journeys all the length of life's uneven road, painfully taking the last slow steps with staff and crutch.
"Every cradle asks, 'Whence?' and every coffin asks, 'Whither?' The poor barbarian, weeping over his dead, can answer these questions as intelligently and satisfactorily as the priest of the most authentic creed. The fearful ignorance of the one is just as consoling as the learned and numbering words of the other. No man, standing where the horizon of a life has touched a grave, has any right to prophesy a future filled with pain and tears. It may be that death gives all there is of worth to life. If those we press and strain against our hearts could never die, perhaps that love would not flow from the earth. May be this common fate treats out the paths between our hearts the weeds of selfishness and hate, and I had rather live and love where death is king, than have eternal life where love is king, and love again the ones who love us here.
"They who stand with breaking hearts around this little grave need have no fear. The larger and the nobler faith in all this and in the life to come, tells us that, even at its worst, it is only perfect rest. We know that through the common wants of life—the needs and duties of each hour—their grief will lessen day by day, until at last this grave will be to them a place of rest and peace—almost of joy. There is for them this consolation: The dead do not suffer. If they live again, their lives will surely be as good as ours. We have no fear. We are all children of the same mother, and the same fate awaits us all. We, too, have our religion, and it is this: Help for the living—Hope for the dead."

Visible Improvement.
Mr. Noah Bates, Elmira, N. Y., writes: "About four years ago I had an attack of bilious fever, and never fully recovered. My digestive organs were weakened, and I would be completely prostrated by my attacks. After using two bottles of your Barlock Blood Bitters the improvement was so visible that it was astonishing. I can now, though 61 years of age, do a fair and reasonable day's work." Price 50 cents. For sale at H. B. Cochran's drug store, 127 North Queen street, Lancaster.
