THE MORAVIAN ENTERTAINMENT.

A Packed House-Artistic Tableaux-Swee Music and Fine Elecution.

Seldom if ever was Fulton opera house filled with so large an audience as assem bled therein last evening to witness the entertainment gotten up by the Young Ladies' Guild of the Moravian church. Every seat in the vast auditorium was oc cupied and every foot of standing room safe that saved his valuables. was taken .. The entertainment consisted of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, and a large number of very beauti ful tableaux, representing important events late Teachers' Institute of Lancaster and seenes in the early history of the Moravian church. The performers numbered about fifty, all of whom were teach ers or pupils in the Moravian Sunday school, and many of whom were arrayed work cannot be reproduced. in costumes such as were worn in the times of Huss, Zinzendorf, Zeisberger and Pulaski.

The programme was as follows :

" Ein Feste Burg," &c., a chorus sung by the Young Ladies' Guild. The Martyrdom of John Huss, July 6, 1115." The martyr was represented as being tied to the stake ; King Sigismund stood near with the death warrant in his hand ; two priests with crucifixes knights in full armor and attendant torch bearers, made up the tableau, which consisted of about thirty persons.

Music, by the orchestra. "The Reapers," a very pretty group of seven or eight girls, amidst standing sheaves of wheat, each girl bearing a sickle, rake or other farm implement, and singing in turn, a verse or two from the poem entitled "The Reapers."

"The Sacrilegious Gamesters " WA: very effectively recited by Miss Lizz'e Maurer.

" Spinning Scene in a Moravian Sisters' House." This was a very pretty tableau. Six old-fashioned spinning-wheels were on the stage, at each of which a sister in conventional Moravian costume was at work. One of the sisters had a spinnet and another a book.

Music by the orchestra. "Presentation of Pulaski's Banner, by CUNNING CARMEN.

Starting False Rumors of Guiteau's Sulcide WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.-A rumor, which was exploded before it had gained much circulation, was started this morning that Guiteau had committed suicide in his cell. It served, however, to put a few extra dollars in the pockets of the hackmen, who were called into requisition by the anxious reparters, and as the same rumor has frequently been started before it is not unreasonable to assume that it has been done in the interest of the hackmen.

As against this rumor it is said by the jail officials that the prisoner appears much brighter and more talkative than yesterday ; that he has quite recovere from the palpable depression succeeding the verdict, and now talks with the usual sanguine confidence of the assistance and sympathy he is to receive from the American people and of the new trial which is to vindicate him.

Gambetta's Resignation. New York Herald.

M. Gambetta's resignation, which was statesmanship. He possessed all a leader could desire. He had popular confidence, a senatorial majority, an ordinarily docile Chamber. He was expected to redeem the country from the curse of governmental instability. He was to win the confidence rains and ice gorges in the creeks have re- of foreign nations. He was to impose his domestic reforms on a willing country. And for a whim he has thrown all advantages away and has brought the administration to an inglorious close.

The whim was scrutin de liste. In the system of voting by department tickets sheet anchor of French democracy. The smaller constituencies, he maintains, are nests of jobbery ; their representatives prefer local to national interests. His indictment of the existing method may be sound enough; but what shall be thought of his thet in representing it to a chamber which owed its existence students of Princeton college charged to that method ? The deputies had been elected for five years; they had spent large sums in obtaining their elections ; and the premier trips forward, smiling and ber last, were arraigned this morning. Eighteen pleaded non vault and were fined ise that they should be left undisturbed inspired little confidence. Why, having been elected on one system should they live for years under another ? Why, if M. Gambetta had no immediate use for the measure, should he not keep it for a better opportunity.

So slight an issue as this has sufficed to overturn him. He made other mistakes during his term of office, but none of much consequence. He disappointed the nation by the mediocrity of his cabinet. His alliance with Paul Bert drove away the clericals in a body. His appointment of Gen. Miribel and M. Weiss, both suspected of hostility to the republic, vexed his followers without conciliating the monarchists. He was smirched to some de gree by the Tunisian revelations. But none of his misadventures presaged the humiliating fall which has followed his of the nation.
