A HAPPY NEW YEAR!
The season of best closed one of the most brilliant and successful campaigns in the history of our trade. We congratulate our patrons and ourselves in anticipation of a lively and increased Spring Trade.
In order to meet the demand we have made extensive improvements in our room and otherwise extended our facilities to provide our spring offering of select choice FOREIGN NOVELTIES to arrive about the first of February. We will be able to please the most fastidious as well as the general class of trade. A great desideratum among our people is to be a cheap article in clothing. There is no good in it. We have tried it and found it don't pay. We will wear one of our $20 Overcoats will last three seasons' hard wear and look better, while a $20 Overcoat will hardly be recognized after one season's wear. Where is the economy in buying trash? Few persons are competent judges of fine articles of clothing shown up in first-class style; therefore, we have special attention to our establishment, where can be found the most reliable and very best in the market, at prices as reasonable as can be expected. We are selling a few HEAVY-WEIGHT at very low prices in order to close them out to make room for our new Spring Stock.

Thanking you for your liberal patronage, we hope to continue our motto of Square Dealing in all our transactions, and show a practical and happy result during our Spring Campaign.

ROSS RAYMOND'S RAKES.

AN ONLY JOURNALIST BEATING HOTEL KEEPERS.

How the Victimized Monongahela House, Pittsburgh, Under the Western Hotel, this Franks in the Press on Mr. Hayes.

About two weeks ago a fine-looking stranger standing over six feet high, appeared at the Monongahela house to ask for accommodations. He registered the names of "Mr. and Mrs. Ross Raymond, New York," in a large, bold, round hand. He was well-dressed, well-equipped and readily impressed the clerks that he was a man of more than ordinary importance. The stranger and his wife were assigned pleasant quarters and conducted themselves with proper decorum. Two or three days later an ex-mayor of Pittsburgh called on Mr. Raymond and quite a pleasant chat, and introduced him to Mr. J. McD. Crossan as a correspondent of the New York Herald. The Pittsburgher departed. Mr. Crossan took the journalist into his private office and learned that he was here to write up the interesting features of the city. The man was intelligent, genial, talked fluently about the work of journalists, and in the course of the conversation incidentally dropped the remark that the Herald never permitted its representatives to accept hotel accommodations without paying for the check found in his pocket. He had demonstrated several times to Mr. Crossan.

Three days later Mr. Raymond was ready to leave, and presented a check of the New York Herald for $100 in payment of his bill. Mr. Crossan gave him the change and the journalist departed. The check found its way to New York, and one day this week Mr. Crossan received a letter dishonoring the draft as follows: "New York, January 19, 1882.—Ross Raymond is an impostor. We know nothing about him."
JAMES GORDON BENNETT.
Mr. Crossan says the invariable custom is to refuse to cash all checks for strangers, but he had honored Raymond's checks because the man had been introduced by a well-known Pittsburgher. He says he will look to the ex-mayor to bear part of the loss.

The Pittsburgher who introduced Raymond to Mr. Crossan met him five or six years ago at Brigantine Beach. At that time Raymond was employed on the Philadelphia Times. The Times since that time left his card at the office of the Pittsburgher, but did not see him. When he called a couple of weeks ago the Pittsburgher gentleman readily recognized him, and willingly accepted his request to introduce him to Mr. Crossan. The ex-mayor also invited Raymond out to take tea, but the latter declined. The reason is now apparent. The Pittsburgher met Raymond's wife at Brigantine, and would have known the woman with him here the ex-mayor and the journalist acknowledged they were taken in, and endeavored to keep the swindle quiet, but it reached the ears of the reporter.

Pittsburghers are not the only victims of the only Raymond. From here he went to Cincinnati. From here he went to the house, and finding people of Porkopolis more gullible than Pittsburghers "slung on style" with a reckless extravagance. He made great pretensions, scattered far and wide his cards bearing the names of the New York Herald, London Times and other first-class journals, was taken to the clubs and introduced to the best people and larded it generally, being accompanied by the same accomplished and bewitching little woman whom he had in at the Barnett house. He presented the usual Herald check, this time for $125, received the money and jumped the town. Of course New York Herald refused to honor the check.

Raymond seeks distinguished game. On January 2 he appeared at Fremont, Ohio, accompanied by a woman. While there he called on Rutherford B. Hayes and desired to interview him, but did not succeed. He then called at the store of P. Door & Son and said that Mr. Hayes would not be interviewed. He would like to obtain a few points in regard to the family, etc., but the young man of the store avoided enlightening the gentleman. A few days afterward the good people of Fremont were astonished to read a ridiculous article in the Cincinnati Commercial copied from the Philadelphia Press, in which he says, among other things, that Mr. Hayes was pretty sure to be found at the shoe store of P. Door & Son, as that was his "hang-out." He makes it appear as though Mr. Hayes was constantly loafing in the shoe shop. Mr. Hayes's friends say he probably calls there on an average of once a week. The younger members of the two families are great friends, and that led Mr. Raymond to draw on his imagination. After a mess of stuff in regard to the Hayes family comes the imaginary interview in which Mr. Hayes is made to unbosom himself on various subjects. With the exception of an item in regard to Mr. Hayes subscribing $500 to the Garfield monument fund, the letter is a absurd and a tissue of lies.

Within the past three weeks Raymond was in Cleveland with the same little "Mrs. Raymond." He was introduced at the Union and Windsor Clubs to many prominent people, was dined and wineed and treated with great respect as being the representative of the first journals of the time. He also victimized one gentleman of that city to the extent of $50 by inducing him to cash a draft on the New York Tribune, which draft the Tribune refused to honor.

Some three years ago Raymond secured a position on the Philadelphia Times by presenting letters of recommendation from Disraeli, and other of the best men of England. He had been connected with the London Times and Standard, and was a servicable man for general reporting on the Philadelphia Times, though somewhat inclined to the "slushy" style. He was sent to interview Fechter, the noted actor, and palmed off a "manufactured" suspicion by respectable journalists of the East. When he was in Philadelphia the lady whom he introduced as Mrs. Raymond was a large woman. He has evidently made a change of companions lately. About three weeks ago he victimized a prominent Boston lawyer named Brooks by inducing the latter to indorse a draft for $300 on the New York Herald, which Raymond got cashed at a Boston hotel. Brooks is very anxious to find Raymond and have him prosecuted. The fellow is about thirty years old and fine looking. His next report is awaited anxiously.

The Leading Question of the Day.

German-town Telegraph.

Silos and their value are the leading question for discussion in New England, and we may say also New York. In the latter state they are beginning to be tried, though they have been slow in gaining popularity there. Like on all questions of importance connected with agriculture, where there are two sides to it, as there mostly are, all opinions there are earnestly advocated and strong opponents. So far, we admit that the affirmative has the inside track, and will have it until the question is definitely settled as much as it will ever be, by several years more of experience. The principal objection at present is of the very considerable expense attending the construction of the silo, the use of steam power for cutting the cornstalks into inch bits, and the heavy hauling of the large quantity of water in the stalks, comprising about nine tenths of the weight, which is of no use at all. Still, if it can be proved that the general farmer, as well as those with full purses, can be really benefited to an extent to warrant the expense, we cast our vote for the silo, engine, ninety per cent of water and all.

The Trailing Arbutus.

German-town Telegraph.

In reply to an inquiry last year in regard to the transplanting of the Trailing Arbutus, we repeat what we then said, that there is no difficulty in taking it up in the places where it grows wild and transfer it to private gardens; and although we believe that autumn is the best time to do so, it can be done at any time except in the blooming season in April and May. But the work should be done with care, the first condition being to transplant it when the ground is moist; the second, that the roots must be disturbed as little as possible, a little soil being allowed to adhere to them will be an advantage; and the vine should not be bruised, but can be pruned if too much of it. The transplanting should be done in a rather shady place, where the vines will not be interfered with, and partially covered with dead leaves. We have a vine or two now growing upon our premises, which were taken up even in May, and which was not done with as much care as the plant demands. We are often surprised to see so little attention bestowed upon the very fragrant and attractive flower, though so humble and modest of its habits.
