

LANCASTER INTELLIGENCER

FRIDAY EVENING, FEB. 3, 1882.

An Unpopular King.

The friends and acquaintances of King George of Greece will be greatly pained to learn that his recent speech from the throne was received with coolness.

Not a single member of Parliament made the slightest comment upon it, and a hand was clapped over an umbrella pointed on the floor either at the entrance or departure of the king, and while read his speech he was not even once greeted with the encouraging cry, Prois Agathos!

Or with other loyal and customary salutations. The people on the streets were equally chilling in their conduct.

Not even the solitary and temporary sojourner in Athens lifted his hat as the king rode by, and the majority of the people feigned to be intensely interested in the shop-windows or in listening to hand-organists.

It was painfully evident to the king that he had not a friend in Parliament or in the city, and if he is a wise man he has by this time packed his trunk and engaged passage on board the first steamer for Germany.

This sudden unpopularity of the Greek king need not surprise who are familiar with the Greek character. It is not the slightest evidence that he has done anything worthy of popular condemnation.

The Greeks of to-day are as fickle as their alleged ancestors. When the European powers gave them their independence they at the same time supplied them with a good, servicable, unrepentant German king. Otto was on the whole a very respectable monarch.

He drew his salary regularly and abstained from doing anything else, and was thus thought to be. One day, without any previous warning whatever, the Greeks told him that he had better go, that they did not want him any longer, and had resolved to get a new king; whereupon Otto meekly went back to Germany and told his friends that he had retired from business on account of his health.

A new king was soon found. The Greeks expressed themselves as being entirely satisfied with King George and his amiable wife, and for a time he was really popular. The Greeks were, in fact, so conclusively occupied with the project of getting a share of Turkish territory that they had no time to devote to picking flaws in the character of their king.

This popularity lasted until recently most unpopular man in Greece was a complete surprise to most of the world.

White, as has been said, loss of popularity in Greece does not prove that the loser has committed any error, it is, nevertheless, probable that King George has in some way unintentionally offended his subjects. It is quite probable that his position on the tariff question has failed to meet the views of the Greeks.

The bill for the revision introduced by Capt. Polyphibios, and now under discussion in Parliament, contains two provisions, both of which have been justly demanded by the people. Of these, section 15 provides that in order to increase the importation of rich tourists, a bounty of thirty drachmas per tourist shall be paid to the captain of the ship by which the tourist is imported.

Section 17 of the bill, and hence cannot be the subject of the present article, provides that in order to increase the importation of rich tourists, a bounty of thirty drachmas per tourist shall be paid to the captain of the ship by which the tourist is imported.

Section 17 of the bill, and hence cannot be the subject of the present article, provides that in order to increase the importation of rich tourists, a bounty of thirty drachmas per tourist shall be paid to the captain of the ship by which the tourist is imported.
