TALK.

Christmas has come and gone. The old year has kissed its "good bye" to '82 and dropped back into the past, taking its place among the most eventful years of history.

The "old year" merchants are preparing to wear out their cushions and trousers by sitting themselves down during the months of January, February and March, to await the coming of "SPRING TRADE."

The "WIDE AWAKE" MERCHANT, the "Man-Who-Never-Has-a-Dull-Season," the man who has learned that trade can be made in the usually dull months by seeking for it in handling forth some new idea, some attraction which will draw the people, and accordingly keep the trade "booming" and give his sleepy neighbors something to talk about and worry over.

Can any person be so obstinately blind as not to see that the "EVER-BUSY MERCHANT" is the one who REDUCES HIS GOODS TO COST in the dull season rather than store them away for the next season, whether his neighbor likes it or not, and such a store is being sought after by the swarming thousands of Lancaster city and county's purchasers.

AND NOW WE HAVE OUR STORE ILLUMINATED BY THE ELECTRIC LIGHT by which every tint and color can be seen as well by night as by day.

I therefore call your attention that every garment has been MARKED DOWN TO COST FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS, whereby you will be enabled to buy an OVERCOAT OR SUIT OF CLOTHES AT A VERY LOW PRICE.

Having still a good assortment on hand to select from.

My "Custom Made Department" is filled with the choicest Woollens the market affords. A perfect fit always guaranteed.

FOUR WEEKS IN IRELAND.

A QUAKER LADY BOARDING WITH TENANTS AND LANDLORDS.

Her Experience in the Cabin of a Farmer—How She Lived in an Irish Castle—What She Ate, Drank, Saw, Did and Heard—The Irish People and their Influence.

Mrs. P. E. Gibbons in N. Y. Sun.

I spent four weeks in Ireland. My aim was to ascertain the condition of the farmer who follows the plough. It is about fifty years since Griffith, an agent of the English government, made a valuation of Irish lands. Since that time rents have risen in some cases over 100 per cent. The Land League is trying to reduce them. I went to see what they were under the Griffith valuation. When tenants are evicted, others take the lands at their peril, and the evicted are supported by contributions to the Land League. I call it an agricultural strike.

Through the courtesy of a Catholic priest I secured board with a farmer in County Cork. Mr. and Mrs. Collins met me at the station and took me to their house in their cart. Collins was not very poor for an Irish cultivator. He was a Quaker, and had a fine farm, with a cow and a horse, and even a cart, even if the cart had no box and no seats, but was simply a bed of frame. Upon it lay a great bag of corn meal, on which sat Mrs. Collins and myself. I staid myself down hill, with one arm at her waist, with my right hand grasped a projection of the cart. I expressed surprise at the number of ruined and abandoned dwellings, for we were within ten miles of one of the largest towns in Ireland. Collins said that farms once separately have been thrown together. When the population of a county falls thirty-seven per cent. in about thirty-four years, or from over eight millions to about five, it is not strange that abandoned houses are found when built like these, of stone. Dwellings of mud and straw are more likely to decay. Collins' farmhouse was on rather a sterile hill. To reach it we rose above the lower and more fertile ground. On our arrival a chair was brought out to enable us to alight from the cart. On entering the house we were greeted by a young man, who stated that under the weight of the great five-bushel sack taken from the wagon.

There were twelve in the family—six boys, one girl at home and one away, the old aunt, and the domestics. The living room had a large fire of turf, and a large hearth in the front door of the left wall. A dresser of dark wood stood on the left, and beyond it there was a red-painted, two-storied hen coop. A hen and chickens occupied the lower story, and a setting hen the upper one. A second door faced the living room, and led to a kitchen. With my hand she turned a crank and wheel, which by some invisible agency created an underground draught to kindle the fire. The fire was generally of coals. It bore no proportion to the fire place, which occupied a large part of the third side of the room. I saw the girl hang over the fire a large Dutch oven, called here a bastible. It was a round iron vessel with a lid. Owing to the kindling fire of turf, and being the bastible to bake the large cake with milk, made of flour not fully screened, sour milk and soda.

Nightfall approached. The bare-footed little ones gathered to the blaze, although it was in the month of June. The babe in arms was Tim, the 3-year-old Nora, and the 2-year-old John, and the 1-year-old Dennis. At one end of the long fire place stood the heavy cradle. A steep staircase, almost like a ladder with a railing, led to the rooms above, for this house, roofed with slates, had a dormer window with a board floor. Wet weather makes the uneven earthen floors inconvenient. The water gathers in little pools. The door to my room was at the foot of the staircase. There were only two apartments on the ground floor.

The fourth side of the apartment was lighted by a small window and the door-way through which we entered the house. There were only two windows downstairs, one in this room and one in mine. They were little round-arched windows. The room had a board floor. Wet weather makes the uneven earthen floors inconvenient. The water gathers in little pools.
