

FARM AND GARDEN.

SOME HINTS FOR THE HUSBANDMAN.

Now is the time to examine the grafts set last year. In many cases it will be found that the stocks, by the growing of the grafts, have split open, exposing the inner wood, and admitting air and water. This should at once be tied tightly with strong twine, and surrounded with fresh wax, removing any hard substance that may have got into the split. This will frequently repair the damage, otherwise the work will always be an eyesore and the parts never become firmly attached and make a good connection, and of course a perfect union.

Frequently double the number of scions as set that the stock will sustain. These should be carefully gone over and the excess removed, leaving those that spread somewhat from the stock. Unless the stock is stout—say from two to four inches in diameter—not more than two grafts should be left, and they should be as nearly as possible opposite to each other. When the growth has been rapid the graft should be shortened. This will of course increase the number of branches and give the tree a more compact form.

As we have often recommended, good whitewash, well applied to fences, sheds, rough siding, and the walls and ceilings of buildings, etc., has a highly sanitary influence, as well as being very preservative in its effects. To be durable whitewash should be prepared in the following manner: Take the very best stone-lime and slake it in a close tub to preserve the steam. Salt—as much as can be dissolved in the water used for slaking and reducing the lime—should be applied, and the whole mass carefully strained and thickened with a small quantity of sand, the purer and finer the better. A few pounds of wheat flour mixed with paste may be added, and will give greater durability to the mass, especially when applied to the exterior surface of buildings. With pure lime properly slaked and mixed with twice its weight of fine sand and sifted wood-ashes, in equal proportions, almost any color may be made by the addition of pigments. Granite, slate, freestone and other shades may be imitated, and without any detriment to the durability of the wash. This covering is very often applied, and with good effect, to underpinning, stone fences, roofs and the walls of barns and other outbuildings. Probably the purest whitewash is more healthy than the colored, as its alkaline properties are superior, and when used in cellars, kitchens and sleeping apartments produces salutary results.

No person who regards the health of his family should neglect to apply a coat of such whitewash every spring. Country places, especially farm outhouses, fences, etc., are greatly improved in appearance by annual coats, and it will add to their permanency much more than many would imagine. As we all know, it is cheap and easily applied, so that neither expense nor labor can be pleaded against it.

Planting Grape-Vines. One would suppose that so simple a thing as planting a grape-vine would not need writing about; and yet the number of people inquiring, "How shall we plant?" is so great that a few words to those inquiries may well be pardoned by those who think they already know enough about the matter. The rule is to plant the roots shallow. If they are long when we have to transplant them, instead of setting them deep we lay them along about four or five inches beneath the surface. It is of course very necessary to press the soil very hard and firm over the roots; that is if the earth is tolerably dry, though in truth no vine should be planted except the earth is in this condition.

It is very useful in planting a grape-vine to cut it closely in the fall, so that its growth will be very vigorous it may be almost all cut away; and even where this growth is strong, one-half may be cut away. This is the way to get a good strong cane for bearing next year, which is the most that one ought to expect a vine to do. "Immediate bearing" is a delusion and a snare. Many a person spends a dollar or a half a dollar extra on a vine which he is told by the seller will "bear this year," when for that amount of money he could buy treble the quantity of grapes it will bear for him, even if it bears at all. Still we like to plant good, strong, healthy grapes. The little cross-grains, which come out as rare grapes at high prices, seldom give much satisfaction. Indeed, it is more than likely that the common failures which generally follow all these introductions are as much owing to the way their propagation is forced, as to any inherent inability in the varieties to become adapted to soils and climates.

The objections urged against the general use of the barbed wire fence, so far as our observations extend, have very little weight and will exercise very little influence against it. Here and there may be a case where a horse or a cow may be somewhat scratched, but it is doubtful if the instances would be more numerous if the fence had been a stone wall or a post and rail fence. While a single occurrence of injury of the kind would be printed far and wide, it would not be considered of sufficient importance to note at all if occasioned by any other cause. We noticed that while a farmer or owner of land can employ anything he pleases for his fence, there has been some opposition made in one or two of the Eastern states to use this fence between different owners, without the consent of the adjoining owner. The matter has even been before one or two Legislatures, but upon a thorough investigation of it, by testimony drawn from many quarters, the opposition was so frivolous as to have had no influence upon those bodies; while testimony in favor of the fence, from those using it, was general and overwhelming. It was shown that while the barbed fence did no injury to cattle, after several years of using it, it was a sure protection against trespassing by beast or man, lasted twice as long as any other fence, and cost at least one-third less than the wooden fence. It was shown that in sheep-livestock alone the fence was invaluable, as no dog ever ventured over one of four strands, and sheep would graze close up to one of these fences with vicious dogs directly on the opposite side. In the state of Massachusetts in the year 1879, the number of sheep within its limits was 384,316, which owing to the destructive depredations of dogs had dwindled down until at the last census the number was only 25,774. Since the introduction of this fence, there has been a steady and gradually increased until it was again giving signs of becoming one of the leading industries of the state. The value of sheep, too, has been more than doubled, making sheep-raising a very profitable branch of farming, while at the same time the land is becoming enriched without the application of any other manure than the droppings of these animals.

In the West the case is the same. Steadily and to a larger extent than elsewhere has this fence been introduced; and it is doubtless an instance can be produced where a farmer has abandoned a good fair trial, in consequence of any damage it has done or on the score of expense. It is estimated that in the year 1874, when the barbed wire fence was first introduced, there were ten thousand pounds made and sold; in 1875 it had increased to 600,000 pounds made and sold; in 1876 the quantity was 2,841,000 pounds; in 1877, 12,863,000 pounds; in 1878, 26,655,000 pounds; in 1879, 50,357,000 pounds; in 1880, 90,500,000; in 1881, 120,000,000. The whole aggregate is 298,805,000 pounds, or 298,805 miles of fencing of three-strand fence.

As a protection to a farmer's land from trespassers generally, it is complete. We know of small places enclosed by this fence showing that for gardens its value can scarcely be computed. A farmer told us the other day that his wire-barbed fence along the highway was a perfect protection even against dogs; but there was a portion of his farm frontage not so protected, which offered a fair opening for gamblers and dogs, and that as soon as the season opened he would substitute the wire fence.

A comparison of the cost of this fence with pine-board fencing is set down as follows: Three-board or rail of forty rods of fencing would cost $34.10, or 85 cents per rod. The same extent for four boards or rails would cost $40.85, or $1 per rod. Three strands steel barbed wire, same extent, would cost $23.80, or 59 cents per rod; four strands do, $27.25, or 68 cents per rod. The double twisted wire is claimed to be strong and tight at all seasons, and that it can be easily handled and erected. From this it is seen that it is readily estimated; and a few years more, as wood becomes scarcer and dearer, the barbed wire fence will not merely be a matter of necessity, but of choice, alike for its efficiency and advantages.
