SAD SCENES FROM CAIRO TO MEMPHIS

Panoramic Pictures From the Overflowed Region of the Ill-fated Mississippi Valley. Following are some sketches of life and death in the regions of the Mississippi river floods, taken from the special correspondence of the New York Herald:

A widow lady, living with her three children on the Missouri shore above Donchildren on the Missouri shore above Don-aldson's Point, was rescued by some men in a skiff after the water had risen two feet above her cabin floor, and was taken to the Kentucky side of the river. She was ill, and had to be lifted from her bed into the boat, and when the party reached Kentucky and she was being lifted again she died. The children were cared for by some of the people living above Hickman on the high ground. on the high ground.

Another woman, living in the same neighborhood, Mrs. Barton by name, beher cabin, where it swung some five feet above the floor and probably two feet above the highest point reached by the water. She lay alone through the night, and in the morning was lifted as tenderly as could be into a skiff and taken to Hick-

Moore d to a Tree. Many stories of individual adventures are told, some amusing and some bordering on the tragic. In one case, a skiff party were directed to the house of a Jim Steinwell, who lived about five miles below Hickman, on the lowlands near the river. Rowing thither they found his frail cabin afloat and his wife and two babies on the roof while he was on a tree near by. He afloat and his wife and two babies on the roof while he was on a tree near by. He had fastened one end of a rope to his ridge-pole and swam with the other end to the tree to which he had moored the house tree, to which he had moored the house. All four were brought off by a line, though the sturdy fellow could hardly be dissuaded from trying to save his house.

It was all he had in the world, excepting large, hinting wholly of sordid, never of his family, for his mule and his pigs were ideal things. He has the face and presence drowned and the provisions were gone. "The Same Story."

Landing after landing we made where the same sights and same stories of disaster were told. .It gets so common in a little while that the edge of the horror seems to be taken off by the mere repition of the details.

"My God! do you realize," said one man when I said "It is the same story"— "do you realize what that story is? Do you realize that the people here on the gating committee that there was nothing river banks for hundreds of miles stood on to cover beyond what their eves discerned the roofs of their houses, where they had in honest black ink on the white pages of fled to save their lives, and saw everything the books of the navy department. they had in the world swept off to destruction by the cruel waters? While he was working at this a neighbor asked him what he was doing. He said he wanted to bury the body. "Where; bury it where?" asked the neighbor.

One planter brought the body of his wife thirty miles to bury her, as he could not get access to his own burying plot on account of the water. Drowned.

There has been a very considerable num ber of deaths by drowning in the sunken district. An old negro, his wife and six children, the oldest twelve years, were fleeing from their wrecked home in Phillips county in a skiff, when the frail craft capsized and the entire family were drowned. Thirty or forty deaths are reported in the four counties, the most of the unfortunates being negroes and none of them being known beyond their homes. It is possible, even probable, that this number will be multiplied many times by the sufferings from starvation and improper food during the next two weeks. On Buffalo Island alone, which is a small island in the St. Francis lake, there is a population of one thousand people, who are entirely cut off from communication. They have not been heard from since the floods began, and the havor that may have been wrought there may prove one of the worst chapters of the whole awful story. For communities to be so ravaged by floods seems to argue a neglect of precau tion on their part; but it should be remembered that so far as history goes there is no precedent for this flood, as it was never thought possible that the Mississippi would find an outlet into the head waters of the St. Francis. That it has done so now is certain, though it is impossible so now is certain, though it is impossible under the present condition of things to tell just the course it has followed.

Individual Disaster. The individual stories of disaster and hardship that come in would fill page upon page of the Herald, but they are nearly all alike in detail. The broad statement of neighborhood, Mrs. Barton by name, became a mother prematurely, owing to the excitement, after her house had been surrounded by the water. In her condition it was not possible to remove her, and not one of the rescuing party that would have gladly have taken her away was willing to take the chance of remaining with her over night. They stayed, however, long enough to fasten her bed to the roof of her cabin, where it swung some five feet

After Mr. Burrows came the would-be leader from New Jersey, the rotund Robeson. He is very red of face; very white of hear which is carling and abundant of hair, which is curling and abundant. His eyes are encircled by gold rimmed glasses. He has a well cut nose, a promheavy gold chain, but several pairs of eye glasses, to suit special necessity. He is always handsomely and often louldly at-tired. His entire aspect is loud, as well as of a good natured, salfish man, who is so good natured in his selfishness that he can often draw the entire attention of his comrades not only, but of his investigators, to this charming quality, till they forget his delicquency and forgive his dishonesty, as they did while trying him be-fore the House for his well-covered up performance in the navy department. ### VETERAN

On being asked what he thought of the present system of aivertising, and if he con-sidered that it paid, he replied: "My experi-ence shows me that in order to achieve any success with advertisements, the article ad vertised must have merit. The masses of the people of the present day are not taken in so easily as formerly, and they look with a degree of suspicion upon anything the intrinsic merits of which have not been thoroughly tested; but when the reputation of an article is once established, it requires a good deal to damage its character. When I first saw the advertisement of Burdock Blood Bitters, I immediately made inquiries in different sec tions of the country as to its sale and success, and was agreeably surprised to find it giving such universal satisfaction. Every one who had used it was loud in its praises. C. Blacket Robinson, proprietor of the Canada Presbyterian, Toronto, was amongst the number; he had for several years been a great sufferer from severe headaches, and by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters he was entirely cured."
