SOME SENSATIONS.

HOW A SLAUGHTER WAS AVERTED.

An Accident That Would Have Cast Into the Shade the Spayten Duyvil Morror. On the Binghamton and Syracuse branch owing to the wide spaces between the cross timbers. They, however, succeeded in advancing over the work about twenty-five feet when their legs slipped through and they were firmly fastened in the structure. The sudden shock of the falling horses seems to have sobered up the driver, for he immediately made all haste across the trestle and ran to Cortland, a distance of nearly two miles. He evidently fell many times on his way, as his face was much bruised when he reached the depot. He told the operator in a maudlin way that his horses and wagon were stuck fast in the bridge on the north track. In this he made a mistake, for it was on the southern track that his team lay. The train that bridge in a few minutes, so that there was no time to be lost. It reached Homer on time, and, after taking on the passen-gers for the south, the conductor signalled the engineer to start. No one on the train or in that station then knew that in but a few minutes more the portals of eternity would open for perhaps all on board. The engineer worked his lever and was just preparing to open the throttle valve when the window of the telegraph office flew open, and the operator yelled for him to stop. The conductor immediately rushed into the station and was told what he would have met had be not heard the warning cry of the man at the telegraphic instrument. The train was moved slowly to the bridge, and the bright light of the head lamp disclosed what would have without a doubt caused one of the most terrible railroad disasters on record. It was with great difficulty that the horses were extricated and the wagon thrown down the slope from the track, and the train reached Cortland nearly fifty minutes late. After the ever, for he was found asleep on the same noticed. the man, so terribly under the influence of liquor as not to be able to recognize

Y., and Homer, is a long and very high trestlework, over which trains usually travel at a very good speed. About one-quarter of mile to the north of this bridge the wagon road crosses the railroad track from the west to the east and, thence runs parallel with it in a southerly direction. The other evening a driver of a lager beer wagon was returning to Cortland with a load of empty bottles. Being very much intoxicated, he mistook the railroad for the turnpike and drove along for the turnpike and drove along the track until he came to the trestle. GENTS-Last March I took a severe cold, and, being negligent in doctoring it, brought the Asthma on me very severe. I could not lie down or sleep for wheezing and shortness of breath. I took this thing and that, and tried different doctors, but found no relief. Six months ago I saw an advertisement in the marked upon the skin, and the girl must papers recommending Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, so I thought I would try that, and wonderful to relate, yet neverthelsss true, the first dose I took relieved me i a few minutes, and before I had taken one fourth of a 50-cent bot-tle I could breathe freely and sleep as well as ever. It is equally as magical for cuts, bruises, burns and rheumatism, I woke up a few mornings since with such pain in my chest that I could not draw a long breath. My did so, and in a few minutes the pain was gone, and I have not felt it since. My wife also had a severe attack of rheumatism in the arm and side. She applied the oil with the for a 50-cent bottle.
