SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 8, 1882.

EASTER MORNING.

Edith Fitzgerald in "Our Continent."

A volitional silence fills the meeting night;

A notional song is quivering through the air;

The daughter of the sea-god, Silvery Dawn,

Calletta her scattered forces to draw near.

Responsive to the summons from the top

Of mountains and depths of vales, and from the sea,

Roll clouds of fairest opal, pearl and gray,

Moving to sounds of shadowy minstrelsy.

A flash of crimson bursts from out the East;

Gathering her fleecy columns files the dawn,

After the fleeting host of Night she flies,

Leaving to conquering Morn the reddening skies,

And Easter Day is born.

On earth the faithful have their watch been keeping

For forty weary days and nights

In sackcloth and in ashes; bitter weeping

Tura they away from this celestial light.

They do not know—how could they?—that the glory shedding a golden light o'er land and sea,

Is the reflection of the angels' story

That Caesar of Death has won the victory.

The Easter bells, what means their joyous pealing?

You seem to draw it in with every breath;

What means this song angels and men are telling?

King-bells! Sing people! Every glad voice swelling

Is the death-knell of Death.

Why Meeting didn't Break.

"Mar Anchor" in "Our Continent."

It may not be known to the reader that Friends' meeting is dismissed when the worship is over, by two aged Friends, who are known as the "Heads of Meeting," shaking hands with each other. In any Friends' meeting house on First day an observer may see the worshippers sit in perfect quietness—excepting when there is a sermon or a prayer—until one of the heads of the meeting extends his hand to the other, who clasps it and shakes it.

Then everybody gets up and goes home without a word of dismissal. But until the hand-shaking occurs no Friend would think of moving from his seat.

A few Sundays ago Elias Warner and Thomas Brown sat at the head of the Bonnyberg meeting. The meeting had been in session about an hour and nobody had spoken. Elias had his head bowed forward, resting upon his canes. Thomas' face looked downward so that his broad brim hid it from view.

People began to wonder why they did not shake hands and break meeting, and some, even of the old Friends who had been disciplined to patience by half a century of meetings, became a little restless and fidgety.

Suddenly a faint snore came from the place where the heads of meeting sat. The worshippers looked up with surprise. The snore ceased and the heads of meeting was asleep. When Thomas Brown heard the snore he looked calmly around and then put his hands up to his eyes, with his forehead on his hands, and his hands on his face.

The Friends saw there was no hope of getting away until Elias should wake up, so they made up their minds, in their usual amiable fashion, to endure the wrong in peace.

So Elias snored and snored calmly for about half an hour, when a fly that was premeditating about his nose happened to buzz into his nostril, where-
