OUR TIMBER LANDS.

DESTROYING THE GREAT FORESTS.

The Wasteful Hove Which is Being Worked in the West and the Serious Consequences.

Gen. Jas. T. Brislin in N.Y. World.

"Our National Legislature," truly observes Bryant, is almost wholly indifferent to the fate of our forests, and betrays a destitution of statesmanlike forecast that is painful. If this was all, it would not be so bad; but, aside from their indifference, the Congress is constantly squandering large bodies of our forest lands on public corporations, who are obtaining them only for profit, and who will destroy them with more rapidly even than private individuals. Candidly, I believe that very many of our congressmen do not credit the statements and theories that, by denuding a country of its forests, you can injure its productivity. Some of them have lived a great many years and as yet have seen no evil effects from the cutting down of forests, nor have they experienced any scarcity of firewood at home. Wise men; to them there is no other land than Spain, and no other age than that in which they live. It is only nearly fifty years since Dr. Drake, of Cincinnati, proposed to Congress the importance of saving our forests. Failing in this he begged the government to at least reserve tracts of woodland along the headwaters of the principal streams as a means of preventing their diminution. The wise doctor was puffed at and thought a little cracked. Well, some of the streams he proposed to save are almost valueless, and a half million of acres will be entirely useless for purposes of navigation. Probably the doctor did not anticipate the time would come when these reserves would become important as a source of timber supply; and if he had proposed such a thing, he would have been laughed at outright. It is needless to say that Congress disregarded Dr. Drake's advice, and to-day the children of the very men who puffed at the doctor are suffering for the fables of their fathers. Maine, New York and Pennsylvania are practically ruined as timber states, and their streams are gradually drying up. In twenty-five years more the Northwestern states will be as bad, or even worse off, for the timber of the Eastern states and in twenty-five years more the timber famine in the United States will begin. Good, say the congressmen and timber vendors of to-day, we shall be dead by that time, and why should we care what happens to the children of the men who puffed at us? Any other people on earth to the tolls, sacrifices and forethought of their forefathers, and it is their duty—every man's duty—to transmit the inheritance they received from them to their descendants unimpaired by war or neglect. Says Bryant, "the length of time required for the growth of timber from the seed to maturity shows conclusively that it was never destined in the order of nature for the single use of generations." Nor is this all. The man who wantonly destroys that which he cannot reproduce in his lifetime, is not only a coward and a fool, but he commits a flagrant crime against nature and his posterity. I never saw a man cutting down a fine tree but I feel like crying out "stop thief!" What is his life as compared to the life of the tree? If he were to immediately plant another, not in his lifetime, in that of his children or his children's children would the tree attain to maturity. All this he knows, yet he fells it to the earth and does not even plant another to replace it for future generations. Is not this man a vandal? Surely; and for he is a criminal and his seed shall suffer for him. If the trees could talk what a pitiful tale they would tell. How they had for ages drawn moisture from the earth and distributed it through ten thousand leaves into the air to descend again in showers refreshing the earth and watering the gentle flowers. Even the tiny blades of green grass would cry out.

"Oh woodland spare the tree, the flat has gone forth and we shall soon be able to say no more."

"Thank God! for noble trees! How stately strong and true! These bannered giants lift their crests O'er all this beauteous land!"

They will be cut down and gone and the shifting sands alone will mark where they once stood. The blackness and barrenness of death will cover the earth, the sun pour down his vertical rays and the scorching winds unchecked howl over the sterile plains.

But they must perish from the earth; the flat has gone forth and we shall soon be able to say no more.

THE BLOODHOUND BOOM.

Colonel Jack Haverly's Latest and Greatest Scheme.

Derriek Dodd.

Last week Colonel Haverly, the Napoleon of the dog world, made a contract with Edwin Booth for one thousand consecutive performances for five hundred thousand dollars, and the next day called on that eminent tragedian with his face beaming with satisfaction.

"Give them, ancient," said "the only dog," affably, "you seem to have heard some good news?"

"I have," said the manager, eagerly, "and, besides, I've just struck the greatest idea ever heard of in the theatrical business. The biggest thing out, I assure you."

"Some new advertising scheme, I suppose?" said the great tragedian, somewhat, with a polite yawn.

"Not exactly—that I'll explain. You see of all the combinations I've had on the road this year, nothing has begun to pay like the dog Uncle Tom."

"The what?" asked
