W. B BOWERS,

Seasonable Suggestions in a More Serious

Mr. Beecher's farm consists of thirty-six acres, and is carried on on strict scientific principles. He never puts in any part of a crop without consulting his book. He plows, and reaps, and digs, and sows ac-cording to the best authorities, and the authorities cost more than the other farming implements do As soon as the library ing implements do As soon as the library is complete the farm will be a profitable investment. But book farming has its drawbacks. Upon one occasion, when it seemed morally certain that the hay ought to be cut, the hay book could not be found, and before it was found it was too late, and the hay was all spoiled. and the hay was all spoiled.

Mr. Beecher raises some of the finest crops of wheat in the country, but the unfavorable difference between the cost of producing it and its market value after it is produced has interfered considerably with its success as a commercial enterprise. His special weakness is hogs, however. He considers hogs the best game a farm produces. He buys an original pig for $1.50, and feeds him $10 worth of corn, and then sells him for about $9. This is the only crop he ever makes money on. He loses on the corn, but he makes $7.50 on the hog. He does not mind this, because he never expects to make anything on corn. And, any way it turns out, he has the excitement of raising the hog, whether he gets the worth of him or not. whether he gets the worth of him or not. His strawberries would be a comfortable success; if the robins would eat turnips, but they won't, and hence the difficulty.

One of Mr. Beecher's most harrassing difficulties in his farming operations comes of the close resemblance of different sorts of seeds and plants to each other. Two years ago his farsightedness warned him that ago his farsightedness warned him that there was going to be a great scarcity of watermelous, and therefore he put in a crop of 27 acres of that fruit. But when they came up they turned out to be pumpkins, and a dead loss was the consequence. Some times a portion of the crop goes into the ground the most promising sweet po-tatoes and comes up carrots. When he bought his farm he found one egg in every hen's nest on the place. He said that here was just the reason so many farmers failed; they scattered their force too much; concentration was the idea. So he gathered those eggs together and put them all under one experienced old hen. That hen roosted over that contract night and day for eleven weeks, under the anxious personal supervision of Mr. Beccher himself, but she could not "phase" those eggs. Why? Because they were those infamous porcelain things which are used by ingenious and fraudu-lent farmers as "nest eggs." But, per-haps Mr. Beecher's most disastrous expelent farmers as "nest eggs." But, perhaps Mr. Beecher's most disastrous experience was the time he tried to raise an immense crop of dried apples. He planted Robert Martin, of Green Farms, Conn., $1,500 worth, but never one of them sprouted. He has never been able to un derstand to this day what was the matter

Mr. Beecher's farm is not a triumph. It would be easier on him if he worked it on shares with some one; but he can not find anybody who is willing to bear half the expense, and not many that are able. Still, persistence is bound to succeed. He was a very inferior farmer when he first began, but a prolonged and unflinching assault upon agricultural difficulties has had its effect at last, and he is now fast rising from affluence to poverty. Line Fruit Trees.

Germantown Telegraph. We have known cases in which much unpleasantness has ensued between neighbors on the question of ownership of the fruit and nuts on trees growing alongside of the line. The owner of the land on which the trees stood claimed all the fruit and nuts; and in one instance that we knew, he insisted upon his right to go upon his beighbor's land to gather up the soon destroy them. There is more or less fruit that had fallen, also to get that truth in this, but not enough to prevent its which had been shaken down. But the general cultivation with other fruit. It is law, wherever a case of this kind has been true that these worms are almost next of the land into which the roots of his quince tree comes into bearing early, and neighbor's trees ran is entitled to all the will go on bearing from six to eight fruit of the overhanging branches.

But the law seems to be different in England. Some time ago two neighbors, years before this comes to pass set out the both lawyers, got into a controversy of required number of young trees, so that by this kind, but whether it was a serious one or was intended simply to advertise their burnt the young ones will come into trade, there was a difference of opinion. bearing, thus keeping up the supply of Be this as it may, one had a pear tree not exactly on the line between him and his feet apart, hence they take up but little neighbor, but so that the roots went into his neighbors ground, and the branches overhung his neighbor's property. One day five ripe pears fell off on the neighbor's ground from the overhanging branches, and these were picked up and thrown over the garden fence, and of course damaged by the throwing. He claimed, damaged by the throwing. He claimed, therefore, sixty cents damages, the value he put on the five pears. The matter was in itself trivial, but no doubt there had been much angry feeling and dispute about their prospective "rights" long before this. The suit was simply on "the last feather which broke the camel's back." The court decided that the defendant had no right to throw the pears fendant had no right to throw the pears over and thus risk their damage, but should have sent them around to his churlish neighbor; but, as the damage was not total, the claim was reduced to twelve cents, presumably that though bruised some parts of them were of use. We cannot imagine where the magis trate got his law from to oblige a person to carry the pears carefully to his neighbor, or to have anything to do with the pears at all. But we fancy that he was a country justice, who had his own ideas of law, and not of the law itself as it existed. In this country such a decision would have been hooted at; and if we had anybody here mean enough to go to law for such damages, and be a lawver "to boot," it would be an end of him socially and professionally, and he would have to move." Irrigating Strawberries.

Germantown Telegraph.
Often when writing of strawberry-culture we have remarked that nothing seemed to make strawberries swell rap idly, and produce a large crop of fine fruit, as two or three thorough soakings of water just when the fruit was about half grown. We suppose numberless persons who grow small quantities in gardens and can readily follow such advice as thir, have profited by it in the past. These and others who have learned this litte hint in strawberry growing will be surprised to learn that it is rather a new idea; and it is said so much profit has been found in this watering of strawberry-plants about fruiting time, that large reservoirs to hold water enough to irrigate acres are likely to be considered essential parts of a wellordered strawberry patch. think that in New Jersey where marketmen generally grow their fruit in narrow beds, this idea of irrigating the beds about fruiting time would be found to pay well. Almost all fruit trees, about the time the fruit is swelling, require an enormous amount of moisture, as so much water is required to make up HERVEY N. HURST. the juicy parts of plants. But most trees the polynome distance of plants. But most trees to plants. But most trees to plants. The property of plants. But most trees to plants. But mo

The strawberry, in proportion to the total weight of the whole plant, has probably to collect more moist-ure for its fruit than almost any other plant; hence its roots, small and fibrous, do not go many inches below the surface, and are thus peculiarly sensitive to a lack of moisture in a dry time.

This hint it is well for those who cultivate the strawberry for domestic consumption to bear in mind. They will find, if these waterings are abundant and thorough—not mere sprinklings from the rose of a watering-pot, but copiously from the spout, so as really to flood or overflow the bed—they will be repaid so liberally as to wonder that somebody had not told them about it before. It is true we and our correspondents have done so on several occasions; but where the strawberry crop is intermitted a season or two, as is the case for various reasons sometimes, it is forgotten and neglected.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

In View of the Time for Out-of-Door Work A tree peddler and lightning-rod agent has combined the two callings and is traveling through the country selling a tree to the credulous, which he says he discovered in South Africa when he was with Stanley, which not only produces a delicious fruit, but protects any buildings standing near it from lightning. This is the season for rural impostors and farmers should be on their guard.

railroads often get so accustomed to rail-road whistles and bells that they do not heed them in the least, and stand on the tracks perfectly regardless of the frantic efforts of the engineer of an approaching train to make them move. A device has lately been patented to squirt hot water twenty yards ahead of the locomotive, and it is believed that this stimulant will be sufficient to cause the laziest cow to vacate the tracks. Hardly.

He declares that the price named is not too high "since it takes considerable skill to catch them; "and because of their enormous fecundity, of which he says: "Understand that every wasp seen before the middle of June is a queen, and liable to have a nest of 10,000 at least. After my long experience I should now as soon think of going to a farrier myself to be shod as to send my horses. Our roads are rough, hilly and stony, much more than the average roads. To prevent the hoofs from chipping, the toes should be kept slightly rounded by a coarse file, such as is used by shoers, and the feet should always be looked to when the horse is groomed." What surprises us so much in this matter of horses going without shoes is, that if this is really cor-rect, why the thing does not become uni-
