NEW HAVEN'S MYSTERY.

THE GREAT MALLEY MURDER TRIAL.

A Model Court Room and a Motley Audience—Sketch of the Principal Parties of this Celebrated Case.

There may be cleaner and better lighted court rooms in the wide, wide world than this in which Blanche Douglass and her friends the Malleys are being tried for the murder of another friend—Jennie Cramer—but I have never seen them. It is lighted and aired on two sides, by thirteen high windows, and the air is vital. In the centre of the wall on one side is a recess which, with a box, is utilized by the judge, who sits under an ordinary Connecticut clock and takes his own notes. There are no official stenographers, the counsel and court rely on their own pens and pencils. Judge Grainger looks like Gen. Grant, and wears a close clipped beard like his. He is a prompt businesslike man, who comes into court through a little door under the clock precisely as the City hall bell announces the hour for session. Then the sheriff, Mr. Bybee (quor name), a long, tall Yankee, with a good face, says "Oh, yes" three times, after which the jury come in and are counted. None of the twelve are bald and but one uses glasses. With the exception of the foreman, the counsel and court rest on their own pens and pencils. Some look bright, some decidedly do not. The court-room was not crowded, great care being taken to keep the air pure and to afford every facility to the persons engaged in work. In the seats reserved for the spectators at least nine in every ten wore no collars, but they all had studs on which to button a collar. They looked like porters, foundrymen, hostlers and unemployed hotel waiters. It is unpleasant to appear disconcerted or disrespectful to the court, and the spectators are under an angel's kindness to call the women present by any other name than "hag." There were but two women in the seats reserved for "females" who looked as if they had ever had a square meal. Half featured, cross grained and gossip loving, they sat and stared at the proceedings in the court until the place smelled like a drug store.

Much has been printed concerning the beauty of Blanche Douglass, and the average mind pictures her as one of the hours from hourville, but it's a mistake. Stand at the corner of Postoffice street and Sixth avenue, N. Y., any afternoon as the shop girls are homeward bound and you will see from one to five thousand just such women. She wears an ordinary flat hat, has a little face, small eyes, small features and apparently fragile physique. There is a suggestion of intellectualness in her face, which is unnaturally and arsenically white and looks livery. She looks as though the sheriff and possibly the jailer, who are said to be kind and paternal men, have taken great pains to cheer her up. She has a naturally sad expression, as though the world was opposed generally to her other than the "woe" which sits there normally there is no trace of worry on the young woman's face. The Malley boys may be the worst young men in New Haven, but they don't look it. Neither do they appear to be particularly embarrassed by their terrible position, for even if they are not convicted of murder they have confessed to habits and conduct the public exposure of which puts them in what is indeed a terrible position. James Malley is a stout, thick set man, with a sharp face, and a prominent nose. No one would pick them out as principals in this great game. They whisper, smile, draw pictures, and look about as unconcerned as other people. It's the same old story—they are used to it, and that ends it.

ROMANCE OF THE COURTS.

The Sequel of a Deceit Obtained Thirty Years Ago.

Thirty years ago a young Jewess applied to the courts of Philadelphia for a decree of absolute divorce from her husband, John D. Lewis, a mulatto, with whom she had eloped in 1845. The sequel of this divorce suit has just now come up in the office of the register in New York. Lewis was killed about five years ago by being thrown from his carriage while driving in Central Park, and left a fortune valued at from $250,000 to $500,000. For the widow's share of this the Jewess now puts in a claim. Heretofore it has always been supposed that Lewis was a single man, and in his transactions he always acted as such. His property after his death was sold and divided between a half brother and a half sister, both of them full blooded negroes. At that time the present claimant, who asserts that she is Lewis' widow, filed no claim, although she must have known of his tragic death and the manner of the disposal of his property, as the newspapers gave full details of both. The property was bought over by fifty different purchasers, and the claim of the woman, if established, will cause much litigation.

Lewis, it is said, was originally a slave, and the natural son of a negro owned by his white father. To escape from slavery, he hid when young into Canada, and thence to New York. The negro blood of Lewis was barely discernible, and this enabled him to get a position as salesman in a dry goods store. While thus employed he became enamored of the Jewish maiden of eighteen, he being about five years her senior. She reciprocated his affection and eloped with him. The couple were married by a minister who has since deserted the pulpit to enter political life. The rate father of the girl, who is now a notary and commissioner for all the states and territories, overtook the couple, and took his daughter home with him, refusing to permit any intercourse between her and her husband, because of the latter's origin and blood. Some time afterwards he sent his daughter to live with a relative in Philadelphia, where proceedings were subsequently begun in her name for an absolute divorce. Lewis was prevailed upon not to contest the matter, although he visited the city, with the avowed intention of resisting the suit. Thus the wife got a divorce, having by this time repented of her conduct. The marriage and divorce soon became a secret of Lewis' life, and in 1851 or 1855 his talents as a judge of goods gained him the position of buyer for the firm of Conkling & Shepard, New York. Lewis went into business for himself finally as a member of the firm of Lewis, Haviland & Taylor, with warehouses in Church street. He was always very reticent as to his origin, and claimed to be of Cuban descent and a native of Canada. He bought a good many mortgages, and at the time of his death most of his fortune was in real estate. After Lewis' flight to Canada his mother married a man of her own race, and the half-brother and half-sister between whom his property was divided were the result of that union. Now the wife, who resumed her maiden name after the divorce was obtained, has informed the holders of the property formerly owned by Lewis that legal proceedings may be averted by compromise. Thus the matter stands. It is said to be the intention to vote the divorce illegitimate, or that it was never obtained. Otherwise she can enforce no claim for dower right, as the pro-

Whatever the cause, don't neglect it. Something is wrong and needs prompt attention. No medicine has yet been discovered that will so quickly and surely cure such diseases as BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and it does this by commencing at the foundation, and making the blood pure and rich.

Logansport, Ind., Dec. 1, 1881. For a long time I have been a sufferer from stomach and kidney disease. My appetite was very poor and the very small amount I did eat disagreed with me. I was annoyed very much from retention of the urine. I tried many remedies with no success, until I used BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. Since I used that my stomach does not bother me any more. My appetite is simply immense. My kidney trouble is no more, and my general health is such, that I feel like a new man. After the use of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS for one month, I have gained twenty pounds in weight.

NOVEL JERSEY ELECTION.

Public Printing and a Town Pump as Political Issues.

Morrisstown, the historic New Jersey settlement which is never weary of pointing with pride to the fact that Washington had his headquarters there at one time during the Revolution, and to the other fact that it was there Marquis de Lafayette was initiated, passed and raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason—Washington being the grand master of the lodge—has just gone through a remarkable political battle, a genuine novelty in Jersey towns. Morrisstown has a town pump, the water from which is of the purest and most crystal like character. This pump, together with the public printing of the town, have just played important parts as unconscious potent factors in the local election. Morrisstown ever since its incorporation has voted the Republican ticket. Throughout the same period the Republican weekly organ has enjoyed a monopoly of the public pen in the way of town printing. At the last Republican caucus nominations were made unsatisfactory to the proprietors who were in the caucus. They bolted. Meanwhile the common council took a new departure, and determined that hereafter the printing should be given out to the lowest bidder. This enraged the Republican editors. They insisted that the printing belonged to them, as they were Republicans. To manifest their dissent they opposed the Republican ticket. They also assailed the Republican council for ordering the town pump to be removed, a physician having stated that the water was not so pure as it might be. Upon this terrible order of council the editors ran the changes and hired the outfit to haul the pump to the election day. Republican Morrisstown went to the demagogue pot-works—that is to say, voted a citizens' ticket mostly made up of Democrats. The people have now a Democratic mayor, they have saved the pump, the Republican paper has lost the printing and is being subjected to a severe course of Republican "boycotting."

Any physician who is acquainted with its properties will say that Glenn's Sulphur Soap is a reliable remedy for local skin diseases.
