DAKOTA.

A Sample of its Crop of "Lians," Brooklyn Eagle. "Yes, sir," observed the Dakota man, as he picked up his hat and prepared to depart.

"Have you tried Chinamen?" asked the editor. "I've tried everything. Now, there's the Chinamen. Last fall I wanted to get in my cotton.

"I should think you would train your Indians and put them at it," suggested the editor. "That's been tried, sir," replied the Dakota man.

"Why not?" queried the editor. "Why not?" Because those ill-begotten abolitionists just here at an hour's notice through each last grain of rice and went leap-frogging around the farm with the whole crop hung around them for ornaments.

"Can't you do anything with them?" asked the astonished editor. "Well, I should remark to the contrary," explained the Dakota man.

"No, I made a little something out of it. You see, Dakota's soil is rich, soft loam about seven miles deep and very easy to work."

"So they are, and there's the trouble. I ordered several car loads from the east and put 'em to work watching my sugar-cane. The trouble with cane in that country is it grows too fast, and I wanted hands to keep it back.

"Do you have ostriches out there?" asked the editor. "Well, you bet! They're a regular pest. At first we thought, we'd do something in feathers, but they've got so common they are only used for beds and fuel."

"The editor gave him the ticket and then sent to Washington for the census report to see what Dakota really did raise, and didn't strike it until he had read the section 'Lians' and there he found a heap of valuable information."

"What can be more glorious than to be independent of other nations?" asked the editor. "What can be more glorious than to be independent of other nations?" asked the editor.
