

WANAMAKER & BROWN, OAK HALL.

UPSET SALE.

Commencing To-Day, June 1.

Scotch people and old-time folks all know what is the meaning of "upset sale." It is a term used when things are to be sold out to close estates, partnerships, etc.

We propose a sale of this nature. The prosperous season so far this year, the largest we ever had, encourages us to Ring All the Bells!

and call the people in to close out, before the 4th of July, all of the $750,000 Men's and Boys' Clothing.

- We Want to Sell Out to make purchases for fall.
- We Want to Sell Out to keep plenty work going.
- We Want to Sell Out to make some changes.
- We Want to Sell Out to start again with a new stock.
- We Want to Sell Out to do a larger business than ever.

We never stop at anything to carry out our plans when we are in the right, and if the prices must be cut down to gather the people.

Down go the Prices.

Even if we do sacrifice our profits for one month, the people have done generously by us for many years, and we are satisfied.

IN A NUT-SHELL, THIS IS IT.

The practical part of all this is a radical reduction in prices from June 1. They are cut, some ten, some twenty, some thirty per cent., and some, on goods prepared specially for this sale, not at all. Compared with April 1, the average deduction is twenty-five per cent. Of the $750,000 merchandise now held by us, about $500,000 is involved in this sale. From the great list which might be made we only quote three items to-day, namely:

3,000 pairs of Men's Cassimere Pantalons, made and making, strong, neat, durable, lately worth $3.50 now $2.42.

600 Men's Suits, real standard Sawyer's Cassimere, made and making, late price $15.00 now $12.50.

750 Men's Suits, eight styles, every garment freshly made, some of them sold freely at $12.00 now $9.25.

Our intent to-day is simply to tell all the people that quick trade prices are on all our clothing for this sale.

PAPER HANGINGS. At comparatively small expense the interiors of public buildings, places of business and our homes may be beautified by applying paper hangings. Besides the importation of French and English Goods, the production of Wall Paper in this country is receiving much attention from some of our leading artists, which enable us to furnish really artistic hangings for the treatment of walls and ceilings. Not only in the more expensive goods is this improvement noticeable, but also in those of lower price.

HORTICULTURAL HINTS.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS FOR THE ORCHARD. Advice From the "Country Gentleman." The planting season having passed, there are many requisites for good management of the fruit and vegetable garden, in which success depends much on timely attention. Newly transplanted trees are often neglected to their detriment after they have been well set out. Sometimes the tops have been left too large for the shortened roots, and the wind whips them about, making a round hole in the soil about the stems, making the roots loose and trying the trees. It is too late to reduce the tops after the leaves have opened, but the trees may be saved by timely attention—first removing the upper soil, filling in mellow earth and treading it compactly, and then staking the trees against the wind. An inclined hole may be made with a crowbar a foot or so from the tree, a stake driven in firmly, and a straw whip tied around the stake and the tree. Another and more common injury to newly set trees, is to leave the soil to become hard and crusty about them, not only retarding their growth, but rendering them more liable to harm from summer droughts, all of which is easily avoided by keeping the surface of the ground clean and mellow for several feet distance about the trees. Grafts set early in spring should not be injured by shoots and suckers springing up from the stock about them. As soon as the graft shows that it is alive, rub off all these sprouts or shoots. If the grafts should happen to die, leave the strongest shoot grow for regrafting, and rub off all the rest. The same attention must be given to buds which were inserted last summer and the stocks cut off this spring. Raspberry suckers, if numerous, crowd and reduce the strength of the few to be left for next year's bearing. They should therefore be cut with a sharp hoe as soon as they made their appearance above ground, leaving only a few of the strongest to grow up for next year's crop—in other words, treated precisely as weeds. The new canes will soon be two or three feet high, when the tops should be pinched off, and afterward the side branches, as they appear, pinched back far enough to make a handsome, self-supporting bush. The same treatment all through is to be given to blackberries. Grapevines, pruned at the proper time, will send out many new shoots, which would grow and make a mass of branches and foliage. Rub off timely all the needless shoots, leaving the strongest ones equally distributed along the vine, at distances of from eight to twelve inches. Cultivation of orchards, especially of young ones, is an essential aid to their growth, but care must be taken not to break any of the roots after the leaves have opened and growth has commenced, unless it may be that the trees possess unusual vigor, in which case the slight check given by a slight mutilation of the roots may not be taken into account. It is necessary to new plowing to orchards, which will break some of the roots, it should be done before growth begins. In cultivating the ground, to keep the surface clean through the summer, use such a barrow as will not catch and tear roots, but which will ride smoothly over them—such as the disc and acme harrows. The curculio should be taken in hand when the young fruit of the plum is not larger than small peas, or as soon as the first green marks are seen. If the insects become abundant, the trees should be examined twice a day; commonly once a day is often enough. An iron plug to strike on, for jarring down the curculios, should be inserted into the trunk; or if the tree is large, into the principal limbs. This sharp jar will not hurt the trees at all down to one blow. The padded mallet is inefficient, and often fails in the hands of those who use it. Black knot on the plum destroys many trees, while an efficient remedy is of easy application. It consists simply in cutting out (and burning) all the black knots as soon as they make their appearance. The work should be freely done, taking as much of the wood with the knots as will secure all the diseased parts. If left till the disease extends through the tree the cure is more difficult, and if deferred still longer the tree will not recover. A recent writer on this disease recommends deferring the excision till the leaves have fallen in autumn, in order that the black excrescences may be easily seen. This delay may answer in summer, but we have always preferred to take them off within a week of their first coming out. With this prompt care the work is slight and the cure certain. Shaping young trees may be easily effected if taken in time, by summer pruning and pinching. A needless or misplaced shoot, which might become a conspicuous distortion if left to grow, is rubbed off with the thumb when an inch or two long. Branches which are running out too long are stopped by pinching off the ends. By these means a handsome and symmetrical head is easily given to a young tree, if taken in time. Weeds should never be permitted to get an inch high. Go over the garden beds with a steel rake as often as once a week. The labor will be more than repaid by the increased growth of the crop and the weeds will never make their appearance. The labor will be far less than is required to clear out weeds after they have grown several inches, and they have covered and partly spoiled the crop. Thinning the fruit, when it is quite small, on apple, peach or pear trees, will give better fruit and enough larger to afford as many bushels as can be had from small overcrooked trees. On heavily loaded trees from two-thirds to three-fourths of the fruit may be taken off to great advantage. The thinning may be performed by cutting off the blossoms with a pair of sheep shears or a knife. The fruit is set and is as large as small cherries, or still larger, so as to show defects or insect marks; leaving the largest and best. Bearing the year may be effected by shearing off all the apple blossoms or small fruit on young trees likely to be overladen this season. The work is comparatively easy on young trees, which as yet have small crops and are more accessible, and it is more likely to produce a permanent change than an old tree with fixed habit. Evergreens may be set out later than many other trees, and also they usually begin growth later. If the young shoots have not grown more than an inch or so they will succeed well, provided the essential requisite is observed, of carrying plenty of soil on the roots. Mulching may be applied to such young trees as cannot be cultivated with a hoe. A few inches of old straw, cut grass, long manure or sawdust, spread in a circle about newly set trees, will keep the ground moist, smother grass and weeds, and prevent injury by drought and hot sun. It is especially useful on young cherry trees. Planting Trees from Poor Ground. It is not uncommon to find writers on tree-culture recommend trees from poor ground in preference to trees from rich soil, in transplanting. A tree stimulated by strong manure is said to make a rapid, plethoric growth, resulting in its death the first severe winter; while a tree grown on soil of moderate fertility without manure, is the one the wise tree-planter should choose. There is no greater mistake than this doctrine, as every extensive planter with experience in both cases can testify. Some trees die from being badly grown, that is to say, from having been raised by persons who do not know how generous roots are to be produced by art when nature denies them to the tree, she has no notion herself it to be some time or another transplanted. It is an art only a small portion of tree growers understand. Other trees die from being badly dug, others from being badly shipped, and very many from being planted with very great care" by people who have not the slightest idea as to what good care means. These, and perhaps some more causes, will account for nearly one-half of all the trees which die under the planter's hands. Very dry and warm, and very cold, or very dry and windy seasons, may bring up the losses to fully one-half of all which die. The other half I would attribute to the trees having been grown in bad soil. There is always more or less of a shock to the vital part of a tree in transplanting, and the trees need to be in the highest vital condition to withstand this shock. The half starved tree can no more stand a strain on its vital powers, than can a half-starved animal. The well-fed tree can do what the half-starved one cannot. When we talk of the overfed tree as a weakly constituted tree, we have of course the fat ox or the oil-barrel pig in mind; but the tree will never over-feed as the confined or boxed-up animal will. There is no more chance of a tree overfeeding than there is of finding an overfed wild rabbit, an overfed wild deer, or an overfed fish. The roots can only take up what the healthy foliage calls for. I must confess that I should never have thought of this reasoning, had it not been necessary to account for the severe losses I experienced in my early career as a tree planter. And if any one else wishes to learn what experience has taught me, let him take fifty plants from unmanured ground, and fifty of about the same age and size from trees over-fed on highly manured ground; take them himself and not by deputy, and watch the result carefully, and I will stake my best plate of Shapless strawberries against his most favored pet, that he will never rail against a tree taken from well manured ground.
