FARM AND GARDEN.

TIMELY NOTES ON RURAL TOPICS.

Sasonable Hints for Sensible Husbandmen. -Protect the Carrants. Germantown Telegraph. As the current is among the first fruits to ripen, it is well to think of the remedies to secure the crop. The insect—no matter by what name it is known—which destroys the foliage so as to prevent the fruit from ripening will now commence operations Its first appearance should be met with a dusting, early in the morning when the dew is upon the leaves, of hellibone; or, in lieu of this, free sprinklings of the bushes, when the dew has disappeared, of whale oil soap and water, made quite strong, say a pound and a-half of the soap to three or four gallons of water; or, in place of this, carbolic soap and water may answer equally well. This fruit is too valuable to be allowed to be destroyed for the sake of the little trouble and expense involved in its preservation. A Good Plant for Shady Places.

We cannot say how common this flower is, for we have never seen or heard of it except within the past two years, though we have since learned that it was formerly to be found in many of the old gardens in this section. It is commonly called the "English Day Nettle," and is the best plant for shady places that we have yet tried or know of. It grows quite thick to the height of from eight to twelve inches, and gradually spreads, but no more than is needed to keep up the supply for any additional planting. It is a perennial, perfectly hardy, and bears a small purple flower in form very like the sweet pea, six making their appearance on every joint, the joints being from an inch to an inch and a half apart. We refer to this plant simply as being particularly adapted to shady spots, as we have reason to think that it will grow where scarcely any other plant or flower will.

Cutting Grass. There is a great deal said in agricultural journals as to the proper time to cut grass. We hardly think that any practical farmer needs information about this, the oldest crop perhaps ever raised upon the farm, and one that no farmer ever thinks of doing without. It is a thing that presents itself directly to the judgment and experience of every one. The farmer is perfectly familiar with the difference in quality and in price of hay cut at the proper time—that is just when it is about done growing—and a later period when the blossoms are dead and the stalk is beginning to lose its fresh, green appearance. No owner of horses, or those having charge of horses, who know anything about hay—and they all ought to be familiar with this important and expensive article of food-can readily judge of its quality from its color and size or stiffness of the stalk.

We are speaking of timothy, which is almost wholly used for driving horses at least, though a mixture of one-fourth or one-eighth of clover is preferred by many. Clover should of course be cut earliersay when the heads are in full bloomand cured as rapidly as possible, and as moderately as it will answer to store away without fear of moulding. It is then worth a full third more than if allowed to stand until the blossoms are dead, when a portion of its sw becomes brittle, the heads breaking off and in a great measure lost. The Colery-Crop.

This has become so popular a crop that every person who has a garden desires to have enough for family use once or twice a week throughout the winter and a portion of the spring. The time will soon be here when at least the ground should be selected and in a measure prepared. We have frequently set out the first rows in the last week of June ; but for the general crop a later date is preferred, say up to the middle of July. It is seldom that very late planted celery comes to much; in fact, when we have set out any-and it was never much—at a date later than that usually adopted by experienced growers, we have never had a yield worth growing. At the best the stalks were short and stubby and tough.

All celery-growers are aware that the ground cannot be too strong for this plant. It has a very small root and can gather only a short supply of fertilizing substances; hence the soil should be as rich as possible in order that there shall be within reach of the roots a needed amount of nutriment.

Oar method has uniformly been to set the plants in single rows, as by it we have always obtained the largest stalks, and have found them to blanch better and to be tenderer and sweeter. Perhaps more in quantity can be obtained from planting two, three and four rows together, but our experience has been, so far as the supply for domestic use is concerned, that the single row is to be preferred.

Many persons set their plants very nearly on the surface of the groun l, as they would a cabbage or tomato, and depend upon banking-up the rows. This requires a wide space between the rows to supply the necessary soil, while any advantages it may possess we never could discover. Our plan is to dig a trench six or eight inches in depth, and twelve to fourteen wide, then loosen the bottom thoroughly from six to eight inches more, and mix completely this soil with an abundance of short, well-rotten barnyard manare. The plants should be watered early in the morning and in the evening, and shielded from the sun from nine or ten to five o'clock, until they are firmly established and well-started to grow. In a few weeks they should have applied, once or twice a week, to liberal dose of strong manure-water. As the plants grow the soil should be gradu. ally drawn up to them; and any surplus or weak leaves should be removed. As they increase in growth the amount of soil should be also increased, always being very careful that the "leader" of the plant is kept clear of any obstruction. This is particularly important when the plant has pretty much its entire growth, and the "walling" or banking-up process begins.

Cool weather is no drawback to celery. In fact in October the plant grows more vigorously than at any other time. Let it be remembered that with a moist, rich soil and careful attention, the celery crop is as certain as any other; but there is no other that will so markedly show the effects of neglect and bad treatment. It will simply result in a waste of whatever time and money may have been bestowed
